would write us upon the subject, and enclose a memorandum with the prices annexed, such letters and memorandums shall be duly attended to. We are in want of about five hundred weight of camwood, and one large elephant's tooth of about 80 lbs., which you will obtain. If small teeth can be bought from 15 to 30 lbs., so as to sell here without a loss, at three shillings, you may purchase 200 lbs. Should you meet with any curiosities on the coast, of a small value, you may expend 40 or 50 gallons of rum for them. Upon your return you will touch at St. Pierres, Martinico, and call on Mr. John Mounreau for your further advice and destination. We submit the conducting of the voyage to your good judgment and prudent management, not doubting of your best endeavours to serve our interest in all cases; and conclude with committing you to the almighty Disposer of all events. We wish you health and prosperity, And are all your friends and owners.[2]

65. Joseph and Joshua Grafton to Messrs. Harrison and Matthews, 1787.[1]

Salem 6th Jany, '87.

Gentn., Your esteemed favour of 8th Jany last came duly to hand, the contents of it merits our best thanks which we beg leave to present. We purposed our Brigtn. Gambia[2] for your Coast again this Winter but the quantity of Rum that was shipped in the fall from Rhode Island has induced us to lay her by for the present, in the Spring we probabily shall try an African Voyage. . . . The bearer hereof Captn. Wm. Robinson having a Cargo of Rum, Tobacco and Lumber we have desired him to give your House the preference of it and have given him a Letter for that purpose. Mr.

[2] The owners may have been Joseph and Joshua Grafton. Of the New England trade after the Revolution one English sojourner on the African coast wrote: "they have now here, from Boston and its vicinity, six vessels, five of which, I am told, have positive orders to take slaves only, and more are daily expected. By reason of some disagreement or misunderstanding among their captains, the price of slaves is much enhanced; and the factories all along the coast, are so well supplied with rum, that the demand, and of course the price, are considerably lessened. But such enterprizing geniuses are the New Englanders, that I expect to hear of their sending vessels for slaves round the Cape of Good Hope: for when they find (which they will soon do) the great disproportion between the profits of some of their vessels voyages and those that are now about leaving the coast, and when to this they will add the prospects of markets hereafter, and the embarrassments they are liable to from our frigates, methinks the time is not far distant for such an event to take place." Charleston Evening Gazette, Oct. 25, 1785.

[65] [1] Essex Institute, "Log of the Romulus, 1781," letter no. 7. Harrison and Matthews were located at the Isles de Los (or Delos). Letter no. 5 relates to the affairs of a deceased Captain Chilcutt, who had evidently been trading on the African coast for the Graftons. The Isles de Los, much frequented by the American traders of this period, are the Ilhas dos Idolos mentioned by Hawkins (this work, I. 48 n.), close to the mouth of the Sierra Leone River.

[2] Felt says that the Gambia had made an African voyage in 1785.

Morriarty his Mate being intrusted by our Judge of Probate with papers to prove the Will of the late Capt. Joseph Robinson of our ship Africa, we shall esteem it very Kind (as it was made at Cape Coast Castle) if you have any acquaintance with Governour Mourgue[3] there, for an introductory line to him in order that he may meet with no difficulty in accomplishing his Bussiness.[4] . . . By Brigt. Favorite, Robinson.

66. Joseph and Joshua Grafton to Captain Edward Boss, 1787.[1]

Salem 21st Sept. '87.

Sir, . . . As we wrote you in Decem'r last, so we again say, "if you are not engaged when we are in want of a commander we shall give you the preference". We should, ere this, have fixed our Brigt. for Africa, had not we been so disapointed from Charleston in payments but from the latest accounts from the Coast, we find prime Slaves were not to be purchased for less than 200 Galls. Rum eac. and even at that rate, they could not be purchased at the factories. We shall again write you whenever we intend our Brigt. for Sea. . . .

We probably shall in a short time fix her for Charleston, for to give 200 Gals. Rum for a Slave will not answer, more especially to sell 'em in the West Indies.

the Sale of Slaves at Charleston being prohibited,[2] has so far frustrated our entended plans, that except some new channel should be open for the Sale of them we shall be quite discouraged from carrying on the Trade.[3] . . .

[3] James Morgue, governor at Cape Coast Castle 1784-1787.

[4] Another letter of the same date, repeating a part of this one, adds, "If our Trade to Africa should fail we shall be at a loss how to improve [i.e., employ] our Vessells". The writers then explain the restrictions which have been laid upon that trade, and discuss the possibility of sending small cargoes of rum to the coast (Essex Institute, ibid., no. 10). The Graftons were restoring a business which had been largely to the coast of Africa. On Feb. 3, 1787, Messrs. Perkins and Burling, who had established a house in Santo Domingo, wrote to the Graftons, evidently in response to enquiries, that it would be difficult to introduce slaves into Santo Domingo since the strictest scrutiny would be observed (L. V. Briggs, History and Genealogy of the Cabot Family, II. 472). Capt. George Crowninshield also sent a vessel from Salem to Africa in 1787, the Polly and Sally, Thomas Thomas, 50 tons, sent out Aug. 6, 1787. This had not been heard from on Apr. 11, 1788. Essex Institute, no 40, letter of Apr. 11, 1788.

[66] [1] Essex Institute, "Log of the Romulus," no. 163. The letter is addressed to Swansea. Captain Boss had sold slaves in Charleston, S. C., in 1786.

[2] South Carolina prohibited the trade in 1787. For a time at least the Graftons considered African cargoes other than slaves. In one letter to London correspondents they enquired concerning the bills of exchange drawn on Messrs. Harrison and Matthews, Isles de Los, James Crawdson (?), Popo, and Governor Morgue, Cape Coast Castle, and expressed an interest in ivory, camwood, and gold dust, but not in slaves. On Mar. 26, in a request to John Coffin Jones of Boston for capital, they stated that they were interested in trade in gold dust. Essex Institute, nos. 14, 65.

greatly depleted by disease (Annals, II. 292). In spite of the obstacles in the way of profitable trade at this time, scattered evidence testifies to a continued interest in the traffic in slaves. The schooner Collector, John Carnes, possibly owned by Messrs. Pierce and Cabot of Boston, carried slaves to Charleston in 1786. While it is not possible to assert with finality that an African insurance in which William Robinson and Nathan Goodale were concerned was on a slave vessel, it is probable that such was the case (Essex Institute, nos. 66, 69, 83). In 1791 the St. John, Grafton, of Salem, and the Speedwell, Burdett, of Boston, were trading between Africa and Surinam (Salem Gazette, Sept. 6, 1791). The African news which reached Boston that year was scarcely of an encouraging nature: "Boston, Oct. 3. . . . A letter of a late date from a gentleman on the coast of Africa, to his friend in this town says, 'That Mr. John Ormond, (a famous chief and factor) of the Rio Pongas, is no more. His white people are all massacred by the natives, and his property become a prey to his own slaves. Numbers of people are sufferers unfortunately I am one. This event has caused such tumult and confusion, that the trade is almost at a stand'" (ibid., Oct. 4, 1791). In 1794 the Favorite and Two Brothers cleared for Africa; in 1795, the Ruth, the Hope, and the St. John. Ibid., Jan. 7, Feb. 11, 1794, Sept. 15, Oct. 6, Dec. 8, 1795.

[67] [1] Essex Institute Historical Collections, XXV. 311-312. The letter is addressed to Salem. The Rev. William Bentley wrote of the departure of William Fairfield, sr., from Salem: "September 23. Capt. Wm. Fairfield, Felicity, Sch., sailed, according to the Clearance, for Cape de Verd Islands. It is supposed from the Cargo, this latter carried, and the character of the owner, that this Vessel is intended for the slave trade. The owner confesses he has no reluctance in selling any part of the human race. The event in its probable consequences gives great pain to thinking men, and in consideration of the owner's easy circumstances, is supposed to betray signs of the greatest moral depravity" (Diary of William Bentley, Salem, 1905, I. 104). The next week Bentley wrote: "The Law against Slavery,. the outward bound passage of a vessel for Guinea, as mentioned (p. 318), led me to think of the general conversation on the Slave Trade, and as the Clergy were mentioned as having procured the Law against it, to think what had been said against them. It so happened that the owner of the Guinea Vessel uttered in the preceeding week many hard things upon the subject of the Clergy, etc." (ibid., Sept. 28, 1788). The law to which Bentley referred, passed Mar. 25, 1788, is quoted at length in the "Case of the Abeona," post, no. 74. Its passage had been hastened by the kidnapping of three free negroes in Boston. They had been put to work on a vessel in Boston harbor, then carried to the island of St. Bartholomew and offered for sale. Indignation over this outrage brought a number of petitions to the legislature, one of them being from the Boston clergy, and hastened the passage of the Massachusetts act abolishing the slave trade. Meantime Governor Hancock and the French consul had communicated with all the West India islands, the governor of St. Bartholomew had stopped the sale in that island, and the kidnapped negroes were returned to Boston in 1788. Mass. Hist. Soc., Procs., LI. 356-358; see also Robert Rantoul, "Negro Slavery in Mass.," Essex Inst. Hist. Colls., XXIV. 94-96.

Judge James Winthrop, in his reply to Belknap's queries in 1795, wrote: "The construction of the act is such that it must extend the prohibition to every part of the world. . . . I cannot forbear adding that it would be more worthy of an enlightened legislature to regulate a trade which is woven into our nature, and has been carried on and considered as lawful from the earliest antiquity, than to try to abolish it. If abuses have crept in, they ought to be guarded against; but abuse alone will not justify abolishing a trade which manifestly tends to preserve life and to increase the quantity of productive labor in the whole world. Wars among savages may in some small degree be promoted by the trade, but the lives of the prisoners are saved." Mass. Hist. Soc., Colls., fifth ser., III. 390-391.

On bord, the 26th day of March the Slaves Rised upon us, At half past seven, my Sir and all hands being Forehead Except the Man at helm and my self, three of the Slaves took Possession of the Caben, and two upon the quarter Deck, them in the Caben took Possession of the fier Arms, and them on the quarter Deck with the Ax and Cutlash and other Weapons, them in the Caben, handed up Pistels to them on the quarter Deck. One of them fired and killed my honoured Sir, and still we strove for to subdue them, and then We got on the quarter Deck and killed two of them. One that was in the Caben was Comeing out at the Caben Windows in order to get on Deck, and we Discovered him and Knock'd him overbord, two being in the Cabin we confined the Caben Doors, so that they should not kill us, then three men went forhead and got the three that was down their and brought them aft And their being a Doctor on bord Passenger that Could speak the tongue he sent one of the boys down and Brought up some of the fier arms and Powder And then we Cal'd them up and one Came up and he Cal'd the other and he Came up. We put them In Irons and Chained them and then the Doctor Dres'd the Peoples Wounds they being Slightly Wounded. Then it was one o'clock they buried my honoured Parent, he was buried as decent as he could be at Sea the 16 of this month. I scalt myself with hot Chocolate but now am abel to walk about again. So I remain in good health and hope to find you the same and all my Sisters and Brothers and all that Inquires after me. We have sold part of the Slaves and I hope to be home soon.[2]

Salem 9th Mo 11th 1792.

Respected Friend, . . . He [Capt. Stephen Cleveland] [2] is a person I have long been personally acquainted with, is one whom I esteem for his principles of equity and Benevolence to the oppressed Affricans and is the prossecutor of one of the Traffickers and his Associate and partner in Iniquity, the noted Sinclair and Waters [3] who have transported many of those unhappy People from their native land to the West Indies and sold them there, the Circumstances of the evidence etc. may be best given thee by himself, his Circumstance is singular in this place, being the first who hath boldly stood forth in the Cause, and altho many are wishing well to him, yet he hath to Combat with a Considerable number, of whom it is no breach of Charity to say are the very worst of mankind. I hope he will not be discouraged but persevere on to the bringing to Justice such Inhuman Violaters of Justice, Humanity and Law.[4] . . .

[2] Stephen Cleveland at the age of sixteen had been seized by a press gang and served for a number of years on an English frigate. His son, Richard Jeffry, who had served in the counting-house of Elias Hasket Derby, was at this time on a voyage. On Apr. 20, 1792, he wrote to his father from the Cape of Good Hope, "I long to hear how your lawsuit is settled, the event of which causes me much anxiety." H. W. S. Cleveland, Voyages of a Merchant Navigator (1886), pp. 4-6, 12, 14.

[3] On Nov. 12, 1790, Bentley wrote: "It is reported that Sinclair has returned from a Guinea voyage with the loss of all his crew. Notwithstanding the laws of the Commonwealth, there is not one man of spirit to stand forth and make enquiry into these detestable practices. I am informed that the daring wretch, who has made me so much mischief, is engaging in such a voyage." On Aug. 2, 1792, his entry was: "The Slave Trade engages the public attention. Sinclair returned into this port, and being without the affections of the people, was a fit subject for the Law. S. Cleveland, of the G. Jury, with a precept and Sheriff, taking such assistance as they pleased went to his Vessel, but found he was at his house, to which they went directly. He was in the room below and received them but soon suspecting their design he slipped up stairs, and fastened the door, threatening death to any person who should approach him. The officer burst the door. Sinclair threw down his arms, and jumped out of the window, and was apprehended by the guard below. He was conducted to close prison, his property attached, and that of Capt. J. Waters for this infamous trafick" (Diary, I. 212, 384-385).

Bentley's implication that Sinclair was not the only violator of the law is borne out by an entry in Felt's Annals (II. 296): "Reported that another of our vessels, the St. John, had arrived at Surinam from Africa. This shows, that a few of our merchants, like others in various sea ports, still loved money more than the far greater riches of a good conscience, more than conformity with the demands of human rights, with the law of the land and the religion of their God." The vessel to which reference is made here and in the papers which follow (post, nos. 71, 72, 74) was the Abeona, Sinclair, which cleared from Salem for Goree on Mar. 8, 1791. An Abeona of Salem, under one Captain Smith, was reported at Havana on June 19, 1792. Salem Gazette, Mar. 8, 1791, June 19, 1792.

Providence 14 9th Mo 1792.

Esteemed Friend, Since I Saw thee in Boston I have been applyd to by some of my friends at Salem for advice and Assistance to Capt. Cleavland of that Town in the Case he has Commenced against the Master and owners of a Slave Vessel which saild from that Town and Carryd out from Africa about 90 Slaves and Sold at the Havannah of which fact it is Said full proof is made, but as the Defendants have made themselves Rich by the Trade and sensible by this Craft they have their Wealth are not only clamorous against the Prosecutor who I am Informed is a Person of Good Character but by their ability to Exceed him in feeing Lawyers as he is not a man of much Property, he stood in Need of the aid and assistance of the friend[s] of Humanity and Justice to Execute the Law upon the Transgressors and what Renders some Influence the more Necessary is that I am Informed that Parsons one of the Lawyer[s] had taken from the opposite side in the Case which the Society was Engaged in at Taunton[2] and Recovered, but Pleas in Arrest of Judgment has been by Parsons layd before the Superior Court and is yet unsettled and to this Judge Sulivan is Depended on in that case to plead the Cause in behalf of the Society or Mr. Rotch[3] who engaged him but is said by some to be Engaged on the side of the Slave Traders at Salem, but I hope this is a mistake. Some of us here desireous of Establishing your Law, have thought best to Desire thy Assistance in applying to Judge Sulivan in the Case of Salem by which it will be known if he is Engaged against Cleavland and If Sulivan will Receive a fee on Cleveland['s] behalf should hand him Twenty Dollars herewith sent thee by Cleveland but if he declines then Engage Dexter of Charles Town in both Cases. It being an action of consequence And he like to meet with considerable opposition has thoughts of consulting with some of the Abolition Society on the Subject" (Moses Brown Papers, VIII. 7). The suggested opposition Cleveland had already encountered. Bentley's record for Aug. 10 is, "The Slave Trade affair has incensed most violently a certain class of people against the Informer, whose life has been threatened."

71. Statement of Edward Pulling, 1792.[1]

The Subscriber in the practise of Law at Salem in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts does hereby certify that Sometime in the Month of July last past, he instituted a Suit at the Request of Captain Stephen Cleveland, against Joseph Waters and John Sinclair wherein the said Stephen Cleveland as well for the commonwealth of Massachusetts as for himself declared against them in debt for transporting ninety Inhabitants of Africa in the Schooner Abeona whereof they were owners, to the Havanna and there selling them as Slaves.

That the Writ is made returnable to the Court of Common Pleas next to be holden at Newburyport within and for the County of Essex on the last Tuesday of September instant, that the said Stephen Cleveland, has taken unwearied Pains to procure the necessary Evidence, that he has taken the depositions of two of the Crew belonging to said Schooner which amounts to full Evidence of that fact, that he has duely subpoened a John Waters who was mate of the said Schooner and who now is in Salem, that the Writ has been duely served on the said Waters and Sinclair, on the said Waters by attaching property in two or more Vessels, on the said Sinclair, by arresting his Body, who has procured good and substantial bail, and that said Stephen Cleveland has taken every proper and legal step to support the said Action.

72. Samuel Eliot to Moses Brown, 1792.[1]

Boston Septem'r 19, 1792.

Sir, I duly recd. your obliging Favour by Mr. Cleaveland, and immediately attended to the Business to wch you called my Notice. The same Afternoon I waited upon Judge Sullivan who told me

[71] [1] Moses Brown Papers, VIII. 9, enclosed in a letter from Samuel Eliot to Moses Brown. Edward Pulling, a Salem selectman and a member of the convention which ratified the Constitution, is described in these letters as a "Gentleman much esteemed, of good Character and Reputation in the Law."

he could not then determine, if he had engaged in the Case, Cleaveland against Sinclair as the Minutes of the Causes he had undertaken were at his Office, but he would let me know on Monday Forenoon. I again waited upon him at that Time, or rather attempted to, as I found he had just set out for Worcester Court. He had however left a Letter, the purport of wch was, to say, he had been applied to in the Case of Cleaveland Superior Court at Salem, but that the action at Taunton, wch he mentioned to me on Saturday as a leading Cause, by wch Cleaveland's would be determined would be argued first and that he was to argue it in Support of the Law of this State, and that he would do it with Energy being determined to exert himself in doing all he could for the Establishment of the Freedom of the whole Human Race. You will notice my Business with him on Saturday was to offer him the Fee of 20 Dollars you sent to me by Mr. Cleaveland wch he did not chuse to take then, as he had not with him his Minutes of his Engagements. Upon receiving his Letter abovementioned I was fully of his Opinion, that the Cause at Taunton will make a precedent for that at Salem. Consequently if Judge Sullivan would have received the money, it would in a Manner have been thrown away, as the Gentleman is already bound to defend against Parsons at Taunton, and he must do it with Force if he means to preserve any Consistency, having written and published a Pamphlet solely to advocate the Importance of the seperate Governments, in Opposition to the Idea of Consolidation [2] and Mr. Cleaveland having informed Me, that Mr. Pulling and Parsons could alone speak in his Case at Newbury, even if Sullivan and Dexter were both engaged, I have thought it best to omit speaking to Dexter, at least at present especially as I do not think he could now be brought in to do any Good at Taunton. These Determinations you must be sensible, are made, subject to your Controul as I am very willing my Opinions should be reversed by your superiour Judgment, and consequently I shall hold myself ready to obey your Orders.

I inclose you a Paper signed Edward Pulling, forwarded to me by Capt. Cleaveland. This latter Gentleman, I had never seen, till your Introduction of him. It appears to me, he has very great Merit in this Case. He is, as he tells me, in Advance Eighty Dollars wch from what he says of his Circumstances, he must not be suffered to lose. Our Society I trust, will enter with Spirit into the Business. It is enough, and more than enough, for Mr. Cleaveland to bear the personal Insults and Abuse he suffers. I am ready to pay any Assessment, or to do any thing that may be reasonably expected. Do not let the Society be disgraced by any want of timely Effort and Exertion. If we do not support Mr. Cleaveland, as far as appears to me, it would be better the Society were extinct. I hope better things than the smallest Inattention, tho I thus speake my Design is to excite the warmest Zeal and the most vigorous Activity. . . .

. . . This money you will appropriate to the purchase of the Slaves and other articles specifi'd in the enclosed Memo. (for us as agents of Dan'l McNiel[2] from the Cape to the Havanna and from there here). If you cannot readily buy the Slaves in the road, we hope you will find some new negroes from on shore, who know nothing of the language, and will answer to admit the vessel, (which must be entered as from St. Eustatia and St. Thomas, and the papers calculated acordingly—we mean his log.) We are to fit out his vessel[3] for the Coast, and send a number of vessels to take away the Molasses he has consigned to us: They will take the Cape on their way, in "order to get the Slaves for admission." For this business we are to receive 5% on outfit, and 5 on sales.[4] . . .

[73] [1] Briggs, The Cabot Family, I. 390. The originals of the letters which passed between Perkins and Burling in Santo Domingo and various Boston merchants the editor has not examined, but the selections printed by Dr. Briggs contain frequent references to aspects of the slave trade. On June 24, 1790, Perkins and Burling of Santo Domingo wrote to Theodore Lyman of Boston: "We by no means advise your sending any more (negroes). It is almost impossible to get rid of an infant negro." On July 27 they informed Simon Elliot of the safe arrival of the Betsey, Capt. Allen Hallet, with thirty-two slaves in whom they understood he was interested. On Dec. 16, 1791, Thomas Handasyd Perkins wrote to M. Jean Laroque: "When the disturbances of Yr Colony have passed, you will probably be in want of Cargoes for the Coast of Africa. Rum, Tobacco, and Coarse Cloths are always to be had here low, such as suit the Guinea Market" (ibid., I. 387, II. 478, 505). For a brief sketch of the connection of T. H. Perkins with Santo Domingo see New England Historical and Genealogical Register, X. 201-211. Simon Elliot, was his father-in-law.

[2] This may have been the Captain McNeil who in 1786 commanded the Thomas. "By her [Betsey] we learn that the ship Thomas, Capt. M'Neil, had arrived at that island [St. Thomas] from the Isle de Los, on the coast of Guinea, with a cargo of 200 slaves; Between 40 and 50 perished in their passage by the disease and cruelties peculiar to this inhuman traffick. Capt. M'Neil's crew had been very sickly. The mate, carpenter, cooper, and four hands were buried in the course of the voyage." New Haven Gazette and the Connecticut Magazine, Apr. 27, 1786.

[3] The Katy.

[4] In 1793 the same firm wrote: "If you cou'd buy more Slaves at 150 or 200 dollars, such for instance as went down in the Katy, and charter a vessel to take them to the Havanna, all on a/c of the Sachem, it wd do well. . . . They are worth 250 to 270 Ds." (Briggs, II. 505). Not only do the Perkins papers provide information on the relations between Boston merchants and the West India trade in slaves but they are said to contain over one hundred letters to traders in Africa, which might add much to our knowledge of the methods by which the African trade was carried on at this time. Ibid., I. 391.

Essex ss.

To the several sheriffs of our County of Essex or his Deputy, Greeting,

We Command you to attach the goods or Estate of Joseph Waters of Salem in our said County of Essex Merchant, and John Sinclair of said Salem mariner to the Value of four thousand seven hundred pounds, and for want thereof to take the bodys of the said Joseph and John (if they may be found in your precinct) and them safely keep, so that you have them before our Justices of our Court of Common Pleas, next to be holden at Newburyport, within and for our said County of Essex, on the last Tuesday of September next, then and there in our said Court to answer to Stephen Cleveland of Salem aforesaid Shop Keeper, who Sues this action as well for the said Commonwealth as for himself, In a plea of Debt for that by an act of the great and General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts made and passed in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty eight, Intitled "an act to prevent the Slave trade, and for granting relief to the families of Such unhappy persons as may be Kidnaped or decoyed away from this Commonwealth; it is among other things Enacted,[2] that no Citizen of this Commonwealth, or other person residing within the same shall for himself or any other person whatsoever either as master, factor, super cargo, owner or hirer in whole or in part, of any Vessel directly or indirectly, Import or Transport, or buy or sell or receive on board his or their Vessel with intent to Cause to be Imported or Transported, any of the Inhabitants of any State or Kingdom, in that part of the world called Affrica as Slaves, or as Servants for Term of years; and that every Citizen Inhabitant or Resident as aforesaid, who shall directly or Indirectly receive on board his or their Vessel with Intent to Import or Transport, or Cause to be Imported or transported any of the said Inhabitants of Affrica, Contrary to the true Intent and meaning of this Act, and be thereof Lawfully Convicted, shall forfeit and pay the sum of fifty pounds; for every person by him or them so received on board, with Intent

[2] The act was passed Mar. 25, 1788. Its opening paragraphs read: "Whereas by the African trade for slaves, the lives and liberties of many innocent persons have been from time to time sacrificed to the lust of gain:

"And whereas some persons residing in this Commonwealth may be so regardless of the rights of human kind, as to be concerned in that unrighteous commerce. . . . " Acts and Resolves, 1786-1787, pp. 615-617, March, 1788, ch. 48.

to be Imported or transported, and the sum of two hundred pounds for every Vessel fitted out with Intent to, and that shall actually be Employed in the Importation or transportation, aforesaid, to be recovered by Action of Debt, in any Court within this Commonwealth, proper to try the same; the one moiety thereof to the use of this Commonwealth, and the other moiety to the person who shall prosecute for and recover the same." [3] Now the Pl'ft in fact says, that sometime in the month of March in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety one, the schooner called the Abeona was fitted out by the said Joseph Waters and John Sinclair Citizens of said Commonwealth and residents at said Salem and Sailed on a Voyage from Salem aforesaid to that part of the world Called Affrica, which said Schooner then, and is still Owned by the said Joseph and John, and the said John was then and is still master of said Schooner, and the said John [did] actually proceed in said Schooner on said Voyage to the Coast of Affrica and did then receive on board said schooner Ninety Inhabitants of said Affrica, and from thence did Import and Transport them to Certain Islands in the West Indies (so called) and there so Sold said Inhabitants for Slaves, by reason of which the said Joseph and John have forfeited the sum of fifty pounds for every person thus Imported or Transported, and the sum of two hundred pounds for the fiting out of said Schooner, Wherefore by Law an action hath accrued to the said Stephen, to recover of the said Joseph and John the sums of four thousand five hundred pounds, and two hundred pounds, one moiety thereof for the use of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the other moiety thereof to the said Stephen the Pl'ft. Yet the said Joseph and John tho' requested have not paid said sums or either of them, but unjustly detain them.[4] . . . and still do refuse to pay the same, all which is to the Damage of the said Stephen who sues as aforesaid (as he saith) the sum of five thousand pounds, which shall then and there be made to appear, with other due damages, and have you there this writ, with your doings therein, Witness, Benjamin Greenleaf, Esqr. at Salem this Second day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety two.

Essex ss, august 2d. 1792. In Obedience to the within writ I have Attached one individual half part of the following goods and Chattles, being of the Value of Eleven hundred pounds, which ware shewn to me by the within named Stephen Cleveland, as the Estate of the within named Joseph Waters and which I attached by order of Said Stephen (to wit) the Schooner Called the Abeona now Lying at Peirces Wharf in Salem in said County, of about Eighty Tons burthen, together with the masts, Spars, Sails, Anchors riging and Appurtenances with all the Cargo on board the same, Consisting as it is said of about Seventy or Eighty Casks of Molasses not Gauged, supposed to Contain about seven or Eight thousand Gallons—about three hundred dried Hydes and a quantity of Logwood, also the Sloop Called the Dolphin, Bu[r]then about sixty five tons with her masts, Spars, Sails Riging, Anchors and Appurtenances now lying in Salem in the County aforesaid, with her Cargo on board the same Consisting as tis said of about two thousand Bushells of Corn and about two hundred Bushells of flour, and also the schooner Charming Sally, burthen about sixty seven Tons now lying in Salem in the County aforesaid, with her masts Spars, Sails, Riging, and all appurtenances, and at the same time I gave to said Joseph Waters a summons in due form of Law.

JOSEPH TURELL, D. Sheriff

State of Massachusetts, Essex ss, Court of Common pleas September T: 1792.

Stephen Cleveland
Joseph Waters and als. } Def'ts plea

And the said Waters and Sinclair come and defend the force and Injury, and pray Judgment of the writ aforesaid, and say, that the said Court of Common pleas here, Ought not to have Cognizance of the action aforesaid, because they say, that by the Constitution for the United States of America, ordained and Established by the people thereof, Since the making of the said Act (entitled an act to prevent the Slave trade and for granting relief to the families of such unhappy persons as may be kidnapped or decoyed away from this Commonwealth) and before the Cause of the Action aforesaid, if any hath accrued to the said Cleveland, is supposed to have accrued or the supposed Crimes and Offences in the said Writ alledged are supposed to have been Committed, it was, and is, among other things ordained and Established, that the Congress of the said United States, Shall have power, to regulate Commerce with foreign nations, and to define and punish Offences against the law of Nations, and that the Judicial power of the said United States shall Extend to all Cases of Admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction, and that the trial of all Crimes not Committed within any State, shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by Law have directed: And further, the said Waters and Sinclair say That by an act of the first Congress of the United States, pursuant to the said Constitution passed in the first session of the said Congress, Entitled an Act to Establish the Judicial Courts of the United States, it is among other things Enacted; that the District Courts, by that Act Established, shall have, Exclusively of the Courts of the several States, Cognizance of all crimes and Offences that shall be Cognizable under the Authority of the United States, Committed within their respective Districts, or upon the high Seas, where no Other punishment then Whipping, not exceeding thirty stripes, a fine not Exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of Imprisonment not exceeding Six months, is to be Inflicted; and shall also have Exclusive Original Cognizance of all Civil Causes of Admiralty and Maritime Jurisdiction, and in and by the same Act it is further Enacted, that the Circuit Courts, thereby Established, Shall have Exclusive Cognizance of all Crimes and Offences, cognizable under the Authority of the United States, Except where that act otherwise provides, or the laws of the United States shall otherwise direct, and Concurrent Jurisdiction with the District Courts of the Crimes and Offences cognizable therein [5]— And so the said Waters and Sinclair say, that the Cause of the action aforesaid, if any hath Accrued to the said Cleveland, and the supposed crimes and offences in the said Writ alledged, if any have been Committed, did accrue to the said Cleveland, and were Committed on the high seas, within the Exclusive Jurisdiction of the Judicial Courts of the said United States, and not at Salem in the said County of Essex, or within the said state of Massachusetts, or Elsewhere, within the Jurisdiction of this Court of Common pleas here—And this the said Waters and Sinclair are ready to Verify; Wherefore they do not Suppose, that the said Court of Common pleas here will or Ought to have or hold further Cognizance of the action aforesaid.[6]

And the said Stephen Cleveland who sues as aforesaid, says the said plea of the said Joseph and John above by them pleaded and the matters and things therein Contained are bad and Insufficient in Law to proclude this Court from having and taking Cognizance of the Action aforesaid, and that by Law the said Stephen is not bound to Answer thereto, and all this the said Stephen is ready to Verify, wherefore for want of sufficient plea in this behalf, the said Stephen who Sues as aforesaid, prays Judgment, and that the said Joseph and John may Answer Over.

Per E. PULLING.

And the said Waters and Sinclair, say their plea aforesaid is good and sufficient in Law to preclude this Court from having and taking cognizance of the action aforesaid of the said Cleveland against them had, and because he has not answered thereto, pray Judgment of the writ aforesaid and that the same may abate—and for their Costs.[7]

[Letter of James Sullivan to Samuel Sewall.]

BOSTON 15th Sep'r 1792.

Sir, The inclosed plea [8] is well. perhaps the only use to be made of it is, that should it be over ruled you can appeal and avoid a trial by Jury in the Common pleas. I believe the same advantage as intended by the plea may be had on the merits of the case for it appears to me that it brings up the question whether our act has the force of Law, if it has not, because Congress hath the cognizance of this kind of business then there is no act in existance agt the slave Trade, for the United States have made none. This question may be made on the issue or reserved for a motion in arrest of Judgment. The offence if there was one was committed on the high Seas, but there was none unless our Court had authority to make the Law. if they had, then the offence exists and is Cognizable in our Courts.[9]

[Deposition.]

I Joseph Crookshanks of Lawful age testify and say that I shipped on board the schooner Abiona John Sinclair master. And sailed from Salem on the fourth day of march in the year of our lord one thousand seven hundred and ninty one for the coast of Africa and arrived at Goree on said coast some time in the month of April following, that we caried on board said schooner from salem to said coast of Africa a cargo of Rum, Tanned leather, tobacco, etc. that we caried from Salem to said coast twentyseven pair of shackles, and twentysix pair of handcuffs', as I recollect, that we disposed of our cargo at sundry Islands on said Coast of Africa, that we there took on board said schooner ninety two or ninety three black Inhabitants of Africa which Captain Sinclair commonly called Slaves, some of which were brought on board said schooner in Irons and some not, that we sailed from said coast with the said black people on board, about the last of september one thousand sevenhundred and ninety one and arrived at maritinico in the west indies some time about the last of october following, where we landed the said black people, and afterward within a few days took them on board again, and carried them to the Havannah where we left them, and Captain Sinclair afterwards told me that the Slaves were all sold, except a little girl whom he called Abiona, her he carried with him to New York. I further say that I shipped on board said schooner as carpenter to go to the coast of africa for Slaves.

SALEM October 24th 1792.

The Jury find,[10] that sometime in the month of March viz. on the fourth day of that month in the year One thousand seven hundred and ninety one, the Schooner called the Abeona mentioned in the second Count of the Plaintiffs Writ was fitted out by the said Joseph Waters and John Sinclair then Inhabitants in said Commonwealth and residents at said Salem with intent to be employed in the transportation of divers inhabitants of said Africa as slaves, which said Schooner was then and ever since has been owned by the said Joseph and John, and the said John was Master thereof, and did actually sail on said voyage within the same month of march in said Schooner, and arrived in the month of June in the same year to the Coast of Africa, and the said Schooner was there actually employed in the transportation of divers inhabitants of said Africa there received on board the said Schooner in the months of September and October in the year last aforesaid and not before and thence did transport the same to certain Islands in the West Indies and there afterwards sold them as Slaves in manner and form as the said Cleaveland in his second Count has alledged; and contrary to the said Act referred to in said Cleave-

[10] The court's statement of the case is omitted as it covers familiar ground. It, as well as the sheriff's writ, enumerates three Abeonas, all committing the same offence in the same year. This, it seems clear, must be the result of the legal forms used, not of the facts.

land's Writ. And the Jury further find, that since the making of that Act and before the purchase of the said Cleaveland's Writ aforesaid another Act of the General Court of the said State of Massachusetts, entitled an Act for the Ease of the Citizens concerning Actions upon penal Statutes was made and enacted and is given in evidence in this Case.[11]

And further the Jury find, that since the making of the said act to prevent the Slave Trade etc. in the said Writ mentioned and before the fitting out of the said Schooner as aforesaid, it was and is ordained and established by the Constitution of the United States of America among other things, that the Congress of the said United States shall have power, to regulate Commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, to define and punish piracies and felonies committed upon the High Seas and Offences against the law of Nations, and that the Migration or Importation of such persons as any of the states now existing, shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress, prior to the year One thousand eight hundred and eight, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each person and that no state shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing it's inspection laws.

And whether the said Action of the said Cleaveland could be brought at the time of bringing the same, or can be duly maintained within the said County of Essex, and whether since the establishment of the said Constitution of the United States, any Action could accrue to the said Cleaveland upon the matters and things in his said second Count alledged, the Jury are wholly ignorant, and pray the advisement of this Court thereon And if upon the whole matter this Court shall be of opinion that the said Cleaveland's Action might be brought and maintained as aforesaid, and that an Action has accrued to him as aforesaid, then the Jury find the said Joseph and John Guilty and that they have forfeited the said sum of two thousand pounds, in manner and form as the said Cleaveland has alledged in the said Count: but if otherwise of opinion, then the Jury find the said Joseph and John as to the said second Count not Guilty.

And as to the other Counts in the said Cleaveland's Writ aforesaid, the Jury find the said Joseph and John not Guilty, and that neither of them is Guilty.

2dly. As it respects the fitting out a Vessel with intent to transport —wh is partly arising within the County and partly at sea.

1st. Since the act prohib'g the Slave Trade, the Constit. of Un'd Sts. has been establ'd wh has restrained the legisl. powers of the individ. Sta' in sev'l part'rs and by or under that Constit. are now establ'd new Courts to exercise their office within the states having Jurisd'n in some Cases concurr'g in others, exclusive of the C'rts of the sev'l sts. That Cons. and the laws of the un'd Sts. made in pursu'e thereof are now the Supr. law of the land, and the judges in ev'y St. are bound thereby notw'g the Cons. or laws of any St. As that Supr. law might be supposed to affect the legisl. power of a state, the def'ts in this ac. might and may yet avail themselves of any defence aris'g therefrom upon the exam'n of the Merits of this act.: from which they must be at all events discharged, if the state Legisl. has not at this time the power of making the laws upon wh their supposed crime arises: but the object'n may we appreh'd be very properly consid'd under the present plea. And we need not on this quest, consider the power of the legisl. of the St. to declare any supp'd facts to be crim'l, but only whether they have power to establ. a tribunal for the trial of any facts, whether crim'l or not, happ'g under cert. local circumst's; We say may it please your hon[or] and it is admitted by the D C'rts and we appeal to the Writ in this Case, that the facts alledged as crim'l ag. the Def'ts in this Ac. are supposed to have happ'd on the High Seas and we argue that the Legisl. of any St. has not at the time auth'y to institt. a tribunal for the trial of facts happ'g there and we conclude that if they cannot and we shall further endeavour to shew that the constit. and Laws of the U. S. having establ'd tribunal with exclusive pow. instit. —any former institut'n is annulled. Jurisd. of matters arising upon the High Seas, the Jurisd. of This C'rt in This Case is therefore taken away The Sen. stat. upon wh this Ac. is grounded has been cons'd as a commerc. regulat. and in that view is I think abolished by the 10th Sect. of 1st Art. of the Cons. of the Un. Sts. wh has declared that no state shall, without the consent of Congr. lay any imposts or Duties on imports or exports. It has been and I think is more properly consid'd as defining and punishing an Offence wh if com'd at all must be com'd on the High Seas or within the territory and Jurisd. of other States or Kingd's—and that view is an exen. of the author'y given to Congr. of defining and punish'g Pir's and fel's comm'd on the H'h Seas and off's ag. the law of nats. wh from the nature of it is an exclus'v auth'y. But it is not to my pres't purp. to enlarge upon these topics. The Trib'l instit'd for the trial of the facts alledged as an offence, is a Court of the St. of Mass's wh however constit. and supr. in matters aris'g within the state, is excluded from any Jurisd. of this action by Art. 3, of the Const. of U. S. Sect. 1 and 2, by wh the jud'l power of U S is vested in a Supr. C'rt and in such other C'rts as the Congr. may establ. and wh Jud'l Power is declared to extend, among other things, to all Cases of admiralty and Marit. Jurisd. and by wh it is also determ'd that the trial of all crimes not comm'd within any St. shall be at another place or places as the Congr. may by law have directed. These causes of the Constit. appear to me to conclude ag. any auth'y wh the Legisl. of a part'r St. might have to establ. a tribunal for the trial of the facts alledged in this Ac. wh wheth'r cons'd as a breach of a Commerc'l Regulat. or an off'ce ag. a pub. inst. are [13] In January, 1792, a suit was begun in Portland by John May against one Mr. Hodges, for fitting out the Eagle for Africa and importing slaves therein. "Mr. Lithgow informed the Court that Mr. Hodges was an alien, and that as such (the sum sued for being about 500 dollars) he had a right then to file a petition for the removal of the cause from that Court to the Federal Court of this District . . . . The question, however, was new, and in the opinion of the Court was important; a decision of it was therefore postponed till the last Tuesday in May next" (Salem Gazette, Jan. 17, 1792). This may have been the case referred to in July: "Portland, June 22 . . . . At this term an action, John May Esq. vs Henry Skinner and others merchants, for breach of an act of this Commonwealth, to prevent the Slave Trade etc. removed from the Court of Common Pleas of this County, because one of the Defendants is an Alien, went to a Jury, who returned a special Verdict against the Defendant; and the same is continued to September term for advisement." Ibid., July 3, 1792.

Gentn., I have received your favor of the 10th Ultimo and am Obligd for your kind offers of Service, but you will be informed e're this the African trade is not yet abolished. I am not at present in want of Shipping, but its probable I may send a Ship or Ships to your address to take in Rum such as you mention, to assort other goods upon the coast. If I should dispatch any Ship to you, or my agents on the Coast of Africa in my Name, to be loaded with Rum etca, I shall rely on you to use your endeavours for my Interest, and also to give the Vessels the quickest dispatch possible, and your Bills on me to the amount of whatever is Shipd for my account will meet due Honor, and you will please to observe I do not permit Goods to be Shipd on a Vessel of mine upon any pretence whatever but what is solely for my Own Account.[2]

[2] Apparently at the time of writing this letter Dawson wrote to John Ashley, one of his African agents, directing him if he needed rum to send to Boston for it, as a letter of June 3, 1793, from Ashley to Montgomery and Company informs them that he is sending the Abby, under Capt. Joseph Winter, "for a Cargoe good strong Rum; which I must beg of you to have put on board with all possible dispatch; as I shall be much in want, having been lately much disappointed in the arrival of our Liquor Ships from Holland, owing to the Warr between France and England". Directions follow for the casks in which the rum is to be shipped, for lumber, and for carpenters who are to be sent out on the Abby. Ashley also wrote to Dawson explaining that he had been obliged to promise Captain Winter an emolument of £100 in lieu of the commissions he would have received on slaves had he not been sent direct to Boston for the rum. On the arrival of the Abby in Portland, where Captain Winter took on water and provisions, it was seized as an English vessel carrying American papers and evidently held for nearly five months. A letter from William Smith to Capt. William McNeill, Feb. 7, 1794, indicates that the rum cargo, comprising 138 hogsheads and 46 tierces of Medford rum, valued at three shillings a gallon, was at last shipped under Captain McNeill, consigned to John Ashley and Capt. Joseph Winter, who was a passenger on the Abby. Both Winter and Ashley were reminded in letters of instruction from Smith that "by the Laws of this State no Vessell belonging to it is suffered to bring off any Slaves from the Coast of Africa under the penalty of £50 for each Slave and £200 fine for the Ship". Smith also wrote to Dawson explaining the transactions which he, in the absence of Montgomery in Spain, had undertaken on Dawson's account. A letter of Dec. 23, 1794, advised Captain Winter that rum was then so high in Boston that there was no object in his returning for another cargo (Mass. Hist. Soc., Procs., XLIV. 668-683). This seems to have concluded Smith's efforts to share in the profits of the Spanish slave trade carried on by Dawson and Company.

Sir, I have the Honor of addressing you on the Part of my Brethren the Directors of the Sierra Leone Company, a Society lately instituted for the purpose of Substituting a Trade in the natural Productions of Africa in the Place of that now Carried on for Slaves and with a view to the General Civilization Instruction and Improvement of the Natives of that abused Continent. We have been informed by the Governor and Council of our Settlement in Africa (Men of great coolness and perfect veracity)[2] that several American vessels have from time to time been trading in Slaves on that Coast Contrary as We are assured to the Laws of the States to which they respectively belong. Under these Circumstances We think it our Duty to put you in Possession of the Substance of the Intelligence we have received so far as respects those Vessels which appear to belong to the State of Massachusetts. And we shall continue to feel ourselves bound to transmit any Similar Intelligence which We may hereafter receive on such unquestionable Authority.

On Sept. 24, 1793, this suit was still pending in the Connecticut courts. Whatever the outcome, it did not prevent Newell from a slaving voyage the next year. wrote to Captain McNeil: "The Willing Quaker sailed from here the 15. . . . The want of Tobacco kept her here for some time . . . and we concluded to put on board of her 20 hhds. more Rum" (Briggs, The Cabot Family, I. 392; Salem Gazette, June 19, 1792). Captain Adamson carried a letter from McNeil to King Naimbanna of Sierra Leone, directing that seven slaves owed to him as the result of earlier trading be paid to Adamson in men and boys. The instructions from the owner to the captain charged him to see that the cargo was young and healthy, without defects in limbs, teeth, and eyes, and with as few females as possible. The slaves were to be "well fed, well used, and kept clean and dry." The men slaves were to be always in irons and the gratings locked at sunset. The price desired was $50 per head (ibid., I. 391-392). About the same time that the Willing Quaker was being fitted out Messrs. J. and T. H. Perkins were despatching the Clarissa to Havana with slaves, under Capt. William McNeil, nephew of Daniel. The Havana port was at this time open to American vessels only if they carried new negroes. It was therefore customary for American merchants to include in their cargoes a sufficient number of negroes to ensure admission, along with a mixed cargo of merchandize. This practice the letters between J. and T. H. Perkins in Boston and Perkins and Burling in Cape François frequently illustrate.

He has been an unfortunate man, and thus sought base means for his redress" (Dec. 19, 1793, Bentley, Diary, II. 77). Bentley later wrote: "A Second Guinea Captain has died this season, Burditt, who with Hall lived in this part of the Town, and were of the Eng. Church. The first belonged at Charlestown, and sailed from it near Boston. The last was a foreigner; both married in the Town. The news produced a bonfire on the Common, in all the rain and the people were alarmed, supposing it to be a building in flames." Jan. 23, 1794, ibid., II. 80.

Witnesses. Crews of Brig Rachel, Leetch of Boston.

There was one also belonging to Boston whose name we could not learn taking in Slaves at Goree and having taken in 40 Slaves, on her way down the Coast, the slaves rose and put the Captain 1st and 2d Mates and one man to death, the vessel drifted to the mouth of the Rio Nunez, where she went ashore and was taken possession of by Mr. Lawrence a trader in that River, after an engagement with the insurgents of 6 or 7 hours Continuance.

79. Insurance on the Hope, 1803 (?).[1]

By this Policy of Assurance Underwritten in the Office kept by N. P. Russell, Messrs. J. and T. H. Perkins for Mr. Robt. Corning

[79] [1] For this fragment of an insurance policy on a slave vessel the editor is indebted to Professor S. E. Morison. See his Maritime History of Massachusetts, p. 33, for a reference to it. It is probable that many such vessels were insured in Boston, though the evidence to prove that such was the case is difficult to unearth. In January, 1818, suit was brought in Charleston, for the payment of certain promissory notes given as premiums on insurance policies executed in Boston, on slaving voyages from Africa to Charleston in 1803. It was held by the court that the notes were void since by the act of 1788 Massachusetts citizens were forbidden to participate in that trade (Mrs. Helen T. Catterall, Judicial Cases concerning American Slavery, II. 306). All Boston companies were not willing to insure such cargoes, however. On Mar. 19, 1802, Thomas Davis, president of the Boston Marine Insurance Society, wrote to Eben Stocker, of Newburyport: "We have always declined writing on Vessels to the coast of Africa after Slaves. I suppose the one mentioned in your letter from Havannah must be of that description" (Mass. Hist. Soc., Papers of the Boston Marine Insurance Society, Letter-Book, May 1, 1799-Dec. 21, 1828). G. C. Mason published the fragment of an insurance written in New York on the brigantine Anstis (no date): "And touching the adventures and perils which we the assurers are content to bear, and do take upon us in this voyage, they are of the seas, men of War, Fire, Enemies, Pyrates, Rovers, Thieves, Jettizons, Letters of Mart and Countermart, Surprizals, Taking at Sea, Baratry of the Master and Marine[r]s and all the Perils, Losses and Misfortunes that have or shall come to the Hurt, Detriment or Damage of the said Goods and Merchandize, or of the said vessel her Tackel, Apparel and Furniture or any part thereof" (Am. Hist. Rec., I. 318-319).

A letter which falls outside the limits of this work is not without interest at this point. On Jan. 25, 1810, N. P. Russell wrote to Messrs. J. and T. H. Perkins: "At your particular request, I have offered to the underwriters in my office the two African risks, viz. the Ship Sn. Francisco de Asis and Cargo, and the Schr. Carlota, Capt. Fitzpatrick, and Cargo, at twenty five per cent. owing to recent news from the Coast of Africa, the underwriters absolutely decline insuring any vessels in the slave trade at present, and of course will not even name a premium on these or any others" (Mass. Hist. Soc., Perkins Papers). The inference seems to be that Messrs. J. and T. H. Perkins were still concerned in the slave trade, though after the act of Congress of May 10, 1800, they had apparently hesitated to deal further in negroes. "An Am. Vessell wd be as deeply implicated with one slave as with a load from the Coast—the forfeiture is the vessell and $2000 fine, and $200 pr head for each slave—this amounts to a pretty severe prohibition and we prefer losing a little upon a few horses than gaining upon human flesh—so that upon all sides we are opposed to getting our vessells in by Negroes." Havana, July 16, 1804 (?), J. and T. H. Perkins to James Graham, The Cabot Family, II. 517.

of St. Croix, doth make insurance and cause to be insured, lost or not lost, the sum of thirty-three thousand three hundred dollars, on the Danish Ship Hope and Cargo (one-third on Ship and two-thirds on Cargo) at and from the Coast of Africa to Havana, with liberty to touch and trade at St. Thomas, commencing the risk when the outward cargo is loaded.

[Premium 10 per cent. The assurers are liable for loss by insurrection, but not by natural mortality. Each slave is valued at two hundred dollars. This policy is meant to take up the risk where a former policy leaves it, meaning no. 15,884 . . . dated June 13, 1803.

80. The Case of the Mendon, 1807.[1]

Before the Most Noble and Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Appeals in Prize Causes.

The Mendon, Jonathan Gorham Fitch, Master.

The said Jonathan Gorham Fitch, the Master, and Claimant of the said Ship and Cargo, as the true, lawful, and sole Property of Subjects of the United States of America, } Appellant, against

George Cunningham, Commander of the Private Ship of War the Elizabeth, the Captor of the said Ship and Cargo, by him taken and carried to the Island of Dominica } Respondent

Case on behalf of the Claimant and Appellant.

The above Ship, laden with an assorted Cargo of India Goods and other Merchandizes, in Virtue of his Majesty's Royal Licence, sailed from the Port of London to Loango, on the Coast of Africa, where the said Goods were bartered for Slaves, with which she sailed for the River La Plata, and on entering the same he found the Ports under Blockade by his Majesty's Squadron under the Command of Sir Home Popham; that the Master was warned not to attempt to enter any Port except that of Maldonado, then in Possession of the [80] [1] Vice admiralty briefs in the possession of the Marine Research Society. For the privilege of examining these records and for presenting those sections here printed the editor is indebted to Mr. George Francis Dow of the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities. The brief contains the statement of the case for the appellant with abbreviated depositions of the master and of one or two seamen, a list of the papers on board the vessel, most of which are briefly summarized, the judgment rendered, and an appendix which presents many of the papers in full.

English; but he afterwards received Permission to go to Monte Video, which the Master attempted, but on his Arrival at Monte Video, he was warned off by the Spaniards; from thence he went to Rio de Janeiro, and after staying there about a Month, taking in Provisions and Water and repairing his Ship, he sailed for the Havannah, and on the 6th March, 1807, the said Ship and Cargo were captured by the Private Ship of War the Elizabeth, George Cunningham, commander, and carried into the Island of Dominica.

On the 24th March following, Proceedings were commenced against the said Ship and Cargo as Prize, at the Suit of the Captor, in the Vice Admiralty Court for the Island of Barbadoes.

On the 17th April, the Judge of the said Court, no claim having been entered for the Ship and Cargo, condemned the same as lawful Prize to the Captors. . . .

Jonathan Gorham Fitch, Master.

To the First Interrogatory this Deponent saith, That he was born at Nantucket, that he had been chiefly at Sea for the last seven Years, and that he is a Subject of the United States.[2]

3. That the said Ship and Goods were taken on Friday, the 6th March, 1807, in about the Latitude of fifteen Degrees; that he believed they were seized for being bound to the Havannah; that the said Ship was brought into the Port of Roseau; that she sailed under American Colours; that she had no other Colours on board; and that no Resistance was made at the Time of the Capture.

4. That he was the Master, and was first appointed to the Command of the Ship by John Mackay, of Boston; that he took Possession of her about three Years ago at Buenos Ayres; that Richard Curtis was the Name of the Person who delivered him the Possession; and he believed the Place of his Residence was at Boston.[3]

6. That the whole of the Lading on board belonged to the Examinant; that neither he nor any of the Officers or Mariners had any Part, Share, or Interest in the Ship, except that the Examinant belonged to her in the Capacity of Master; and that she was built at Weymouth, in the State of Massachusetts.

[2] In his deposition Captain Fitch describes in more detail his various voyages. This seems to have been his first venture in slaves.

[3] Among the papers carried by the vessel was a clearance dated Portsmouth, Dec. 7, 1801: "Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States of America, to all who shall see these Presents, greeting. Be it known, that Leave and Permission are given to Richard Curtis, Master or Commander of the Bark called the Mendon, of the Burthen of 137 29/95ths Tons, or thereabouts, lying at present in the Port of Portsmouth, bound for the Cape of Good Hope, and laden with Brandy, Shooks, Hoops, Grindstones, Canvas, Axes, Steel, Cordage, Butter, Beef, Coals, Anvils, Rum, and Dry Goods, to depart and proceed with the said Bark on his said Voyage, such bark having been visited, and the said Master having made oath, before the proper Officer, that the said Bark and Cargo belongs to one or more of the Citizens of the United States of America, and to him or them only."

7. That her Name was the Mendon; that she had been so called since she was built; that she had a Sea-letter on board; that during the Voyage before she was taken she sailed from London to the Coast of Africa, and from thence bound to the River La Plata, at which Place he arrived about the 20th November then last past, and found that it was blockaded by his Britannic Majesty's Ships of War; that he then sailed in her for the Rio de Janeiro, and that her last Voyage began at London and was to have ended there; that her Lading on her first Voyage was with Slaves, from the Port of Mosambique bound to the River La Plata, at which Place they were sold, when the Examinant took Charge of her and loaded her with Tallow for the Port of London, where it was delivered; that she then carried Dry Goods to the River La Plata, there loaded Tallow, which was delivered at London; that her last Cargo was an assorted one of India Goods, taken in at London and delivered at the Bay of Loango, in Africa; that the last Port she sailed from was the Rio de Janeiro, which she left about the 20th January last, but that no Clearances were given since she left the Port of London.

8. That the Lading she carried at her first setting Sail was an assorted Cargo of India Goods and about three Pipes of Spirits, and that she had on board when captured seventy-five Slaves and some trifling Articles remaining of her outward- bound Cargo.[4]

9. That Mr. Mungo Mackay was the Owner of the Ship; he knew him to be the Owner from Information of his Agent, who chartered her to the Examinant; that such Owner was by Birth an American and resided in Boston, where he believed he had always resided.

10. That a Bill of Sale of the said Ship was made by Philip Riley to John Mackay, the Brother of Mungo Mackay, on Account of the said Mungo Mackay, at Buenos Ayres in the Presence of two Witnesses, which was delivered up to the Captors.

12. That he, the Examinant, was the Lader, Owner, and Consignee of the Cargo on board; that he now lived in London, and carried on his Business and Trade there; that he had been established there as a Resident for twelve Months; that before he went to Sea his Residence was at Nantucket; that the Ship was bound to the Havannah, where the Cargo would have been delivered if permitted, and for the real Account, Risk, and Benefit of the Examinant; that, at the Time of the lading of the Cargo, and at the present Time, and also if the same should be restored and unladen at the destined Port, the same did, do, and would belong to the Examinant, and to no other Person.

[4] The cargo laden in London amounted to £1715 15 9. William Brunton, the captain's clerk, stated that it consisted of India goods, crockery, rum, and paints, and that the paint was still on board when the vessel was captured.

15. That a Charter-party was signed, which was delivered up with the Papers; that such Charter-party was made in March or April last past, between the Examinant and a Mr. William Todd, the Agent for the Ship at London, the Contents of which were, that the Examinant, for the Sum of five hundred Pounds Sterling, paid to Mr. Todd by him, was to have the Use of the said Ship so long as he chose, he keeping her in Order at his own Expence.

16. That there were on board the said Ship at the Time of her taking her Departure from her last clearing Port, before her being taken as Prize, a Register, Sea-letter, Mediterranean Pass, Bill of Sale, Charter-party, one Bill of Lading, with a Consul's Certificate attached to the same, the King's Licence, Invoices, Accounts, and two Protests; that none of them were burnt, torn, thrown overboard, destroyed, or cancelled, concealed, or attempted to be concealed, except the two Protests, which were still in Possession of the Examinant, but he had been shewn to the Captain of the Privateer.

19. That on his Departure from London he left Instructions with Messrs. Foster, Brunton, and Goddard, of London, to insure the said Ship and Goods on her Passage from London to Africa, and from Africa to the River La Plata, and back to London.

20. That in case the said Ship had arrived at her destined Port, the Examinant was to have taken the Chance of the Market for the Sale of his Goods.

21. That the Negroes were of the Congo Nation,[5] and the other Articles remaining on board were of the Manufacture of Great Britain.

27. That all the Passports, Sea-briefs, Charter-parties, Bills of Sale, Invoices and Papers, which were found on board, were entirely true and fair; and that none of them were false or colourable; and that he knows of no Matter or Circumstance to affect their Credit; that the Passport and Sea-brief were obtained by Mr. Harne, of Massachusetts, for this Ship only; that he believed they were obtained upon the Oath of the Persons therein described, and were to last as long as the Ship was sea-worthy; that there was a Duty or Fee payable, and he believed they were paid; and that there was a Duty and Fee to be paid whenever they were renewed; that such Passports had not been renewed, to the Knowledge of the Examinant, and he believed the Ship was in the Port when the Sea-brief and Passports were granted.

29. That the Ship was steering her Course to the Havannah at the Time of her being first pursued and taken, and that her Course was not altered by the Appearance of the Vessel by which she was taken; that her Course was at all Times, when the Weather permitted, directed to the Havannah.

30. That the Ship was first sold to Mr. Riley, by her then Supercargo, whose Name he did not know; that such Sale was made at Buenos Ayres, but he did not know at what Time, for what Sum, or what Consideration, or whether such Sum was ever paid; she was afterwards sold by Mr. Riley to Mr. John Mackay, for his Brother, Mungo Mackay, at Buenos Ayres, for about 11,000 Dollars, to the best of his Recollection, which Sum was paid; that it was a fair and true Equivalent, and he believed such Sale and Transfer to have been truly made, and not for the Purpose of covering or concealing the real Property; and he verily believed if the said Ship should be restored she would belong to Mr. Mungo Mackay, and to no other Person. . . .

James Williams the Mate.[6]

6. That he believed the Captain to be the sole Owner of the Ship and her Lading.

7. That after he shipped on board the said Ship she sailed from Loango, bound to Monte Video, but was detained by a British Squadron under Sir Home Popham, and carried to Maldonado; that from Maldonado she sailed to Monte Video, by Permission of Sir Home Popham; that the Ship was not allowed to enter there, and she then sailed for Rio de Janeiro, from whence she sailed bound for the Havannah or Charlestown, which would be most convenient; that the only Cargo of which he had any knowledge was her last outward-bound Cargo, consisting of Cloths, Earthen-ware, Spirits, and a small Quantity of Cutlery, which was delivered at Loango, excepting a small Part thereof then on board, and that the said Ship sailed from Rio de Janeiro about the 19th of January, then last past.

8. That the said Ship when taken, had on board Slaves and a few Articles of her outward-bound Cargo.

9. That to the best of his Knowledge the Captain was the Owner of the Ship when taken; that he believed he was the Owner at the Time from his having so informed the Examinant.

12. That Captain Fitch was the Lader, Owner, and Consignee of the Cargo then on board, which was to have been delivered at Charlestown or the Havannah for the real Account, Risk, and Benefit of the said Captain Fitch; that his Belief was founded on what Captain Fitch had informed him; and that he could take upon himself to swear he believed that at the Time of lading the Cargo, and at the present Time, and also if the same should be restored and unladed, the same did, does, and would belong to the said Captain Fitch, and to no other Person.

20. That he believed if the Cargo had been unladen at the destined Port it would have immediately become the Property of the said Captain Fitch, and of no other Person; and that he was to have taken the Chance of the Market for the Sale thereof.

21. That the Slaves on board were Natives of Africa; and that the remaining Articles of the outward-bound Cargo were of the Manufacture of Great Britain.[7] . . .

Papers transmitted in the Process from Barbadoes.[8]

Register, dated Portsmouth, 7th December, 1801, granted on Oath of Samuel Ham, of Portsmouth, in the State of New Hampshire, Merchant, who deposed that he, together with Benjamin Conner, of Exeter, and Jonathan Clark, of Portsmouth, were the Owners of the Ship Mendon of Portsmouth, whereof Richard Curtis was then Master, a Citizen of the United States; that the Vessel was built at Weymouth, in the State of Massachusetts, in the Year 1800, as appeared by Certificate, and that the said Ship had been duly registered at the Port of Portsmouth.

Certificate, dated Buenos Ayres, 24th June, 1804, and signed Silas Atkins, jun. and Mark Riley, that at the City of Buenos Ayres there was no American Consul, nor Agent for the United States, and that the within-mentioned Ship, the Mendon, was bought by John Mackay, Agent for Mr. Mungo Mackay, jun. a Citizen of the United States, residing at Boston, on his sole Account and Risk, and that Jonathan Gorham Fitch was appointed Master, in Lieu of Richard Curtis, late Master. . . .

Bill of Sale of the Ship, dated 24th June 1804, by John Reilly, of Philadelphia, Owner of the Mendon, of Portsmouth, in Consideration of the Sum of 11,000 Dollars lawful Money of the United States of America, paid to him by Mungo Mackay, jun. of Boston, he sold to the said Mungo Mackay, jun. the said Ship, to the sole and only proper Use and Benefit of him the said Mungo Mackay, jun. for ever. . . . Whereas, the Commanders of several Slave Ships, who had a Notification given them, that the Ports of La Plata [were [8] In addition to the items here printed, clearance papers, a certificate from the American consul in London, the articles of agreement and the roll of the officers and crew of the vessel, a freight agreement between William Todd, jr., London agent of Mungo Mackay, and Captain Fitch, several further depositions, and various certificates are included among the prize papers. The Mendon had on board ten mariners, two Germans and eight Americans, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Albany, and Charleston. She carried three blunderbusses, one musket, four pistols, two cutlasses, and ammunition, for protection from the slaves, but had no guns mounted.

81. ACT OF THE GENERAL COURT, MAY 19, 1652.[1]

Whereas, there is a common course practised amongst English men to buy negers, to that end they may have them for service or slaves forever; for the preventinge of such practices among us, let it be ordered, that no blacke mankind or white being [be] forced by covenant bond, or otherwise, to serve any man or his assighnes longer than ten yeares, or untill they come to bee twentie four yeares of age, if they bee taken in under fourteen, from the time of their cominge within the liberties of this Collonie. And at the end or terme of ten yeares to sett them free, as the manner is with the English servants. And that man that will not let them goe free, or shall sell them away elsewhere, to that end that they may bee enslaved to others for a long time, hee or they shall forfeit to the Collonie forty pounds.

[9] The cause was heard Apr. 17, 1807, before the judge of the vice admiralty court of Barbados, and the vessel and cargo were condemned as prize. An appeal from this decree was entered by Jonathan Gorham Fitch and John Mackay of Boston, brother and heir of Mungo Mackay. The Lords, having heard the proof read, reversed the earlier decision and restored the ship and cargo to the claimants.

For some knowledge of the share which Massachusetts took in importations into South Carolina between 1803 and 1807 see this work, vol. IV., South Carolina.

[81] [1] "Acts and Orders made at the Generall Court of Election held at Warwick", Rhode Island Colonial Records, I. 243. For a discussion of this measure see Du Bois, Suppression of the Slave Trade, pp. 33-34; W. D. Johnston, "Slavery in Rhode Island," Publications of the Rhode Island Historical Society, new ser., II. 114. This, the fourth law in this country limiting slavery, has no extant history. What lay behind it, how widespread was the desire for it, for how long, if ever, it was enforced, can only be surmised. It is not improbable that the Dutch from Manhattan made negro slaves available to the Rhode Island colonists, but no evidence of this has come to light. The fact that the act was passed at a time when commissioners from Newport and Portsmouth were not meeting with those of Providence and Warwick may have some significance, since the economic importance of slavery was clearly greater to the southern towns; but this again is surmise, as it is by no means manifest that such importance had as yet been recognized.

82. Act of the General Assembly, April, 1708.[1]

And it is further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that whereas, by an act of Assembly, in February last past,[2] concerning the importing negroes, one article of said act, expressing that three pounds money shall be paid into the treasury for each negro imported into this colony; but upon exporting such negro in time limited in said act, said three pounds were to be drawn out of the treasury again by the importer:

It is hereby enacted, that said sum for the future, shall not be drawn out, but there continued for the use in said act expressed; any act to the contrary, notwithstanding.

83. Governor Samuel Cranston to the Board of Trade, 1708.[1]

May it please your Lordships: In obedience to your Lordships' commands of the 15th of April last, to the trade of Africa.

We, having inspected into the books of Her Majesty's custom, and informed ourselves from the proper officers thereof, by strict inquiry, can lay before your Lordships no other account of that trade than the following viz.:

1. That from the 24th of June, 1698, to the 25th of December, 1707, we have not had any negroes imported into this colony from the coast of Africa, neither on the account of the Royal African Company, or by any of the separate traders.

2. That on the 30th day of May, 1696, arrived at this port from the coast of Africa, the brigantine Seaflower, Thomas Windsor, master, having on board her forty-seven negroes, fourteen of which he disposed of in this colony, for betwixt £30 and £35 per head; the rest he transported by land for Boston, where his owners lived.

3. That on the 10th of August, the 19th and 28th of October, in the year 1700,[2] sailed from this port three vessels, directly for the coast of Africa; the two former were sloops, the one commanded by Nicho's Hillgrove, the other by Jacob Bill: the last a ship, com-

[82] [1] "Proceedings of the General Assembly held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the last Tuesday of April, 1708", R. I. Col. Recs., IV. 34.

[2] Various searchers in the Rhode Island material have failed to find either text or title of the February act (Du Bois, p. 205). If the statement in the act of 1715 is correct, a duty was laid upon incoming negroes as early as 1701/2. No other evidence of it has been found, however.

[83] [1] R. I. Col. Recs., IV. 54-55. Governor Cranston was here replying to the circular letter sent out by the Board of Trade on Apr. 15, 1708, in preparation for its comprehensive report to the House of Commons of Jan. 27, 1709 (this work, II. 49-81). The governor's three letters of this date were read by the board on Dec. 12, 1709. Journal of the Board of Trade, 1708-1715, p. 104; R. I. Col. Recs., IV. 92.

[2] See ante, no. 28. Captain Windsor's expedition in 1696 was in violation of the monopoly of the African Company. While those of 1700 may have complied with the requirements of the law of 1698, it is quite likely that they too were encroachments upon the privileges of the company.

manded by Edwin Carter, who was part owner of the said three vessels, in company with Thomas Bruster, and John Bates, merchants of Barbadoes, and separate traders from thence to the coast of Africa; the said three vessels arriving safe to Barbadoes from the coast of Africa, where they made the disposition of their negroes.

4. That we have never had any vessels from the coast of Africa to this colony, nor any trade there, the brigantine above mentioned excepted.

5. That the whole and only supply of negroes to this colony, is from the island of Barbadoes; from whence is imported one year with another, betwixt twenty and thirty, and if those arrive well and sound, the general price is from £30 to £40 per head.[3]

According to your Lordships' desire, we have advised with the chiefest of our planters, and find but small encouragement for that trade to this colony; since by the best computation we can make, there would not be disposed in this colony above twenty or thirty at the most, annually; the reasons of which are chiefly to be attributed to the general dislike our planters have for them, by reason of their turbulent and unruly tempers.

And that most of our planters that are able and willing to purchase any of them, are supplied by the offspring of those they have already, which increase daily; and that the inclination of our people in general, is to employ white servants before negroes.

Thus we have given your Lordships a true and faithful account of what hath occurred, relating to the trade of Africa from this colony; and if, for the future, our trade should be extended to those parts, we shall not fail transmitting accounts thereof according to your Lordships' orders.[4]

NEWPORT, on RHODE ISLAND, December 5, 1708.

[3] One specific purchase can be cited: William Hawkins of Providence purchased a negro from William Mackcollin, a Barbados merchant, on June 7, 1695. Early Records of the Town of Providence (1894), IV. 71-72.

[4] Cranston accompanied this report by two others dealing with subjects about which the Board of Trade had asked information. A comparison of these reports with that sent to the board by Governor Peleg Sanford in 1680 shows that during the intervening quarter of a century Rhode Island had passed from a planting to a trading community. Sanford reported that there were no merchants nor men of considerable estates, no shipping save a few sloops, and no customs duties. The Newport custom-house was established in 1681; a duty on molasses was laid in 1696. During the '80's Rhode Island developed the great skill in distilling which was to play so large a part in her later commercial history. Cranston's account pictures a commercial society in close intercourse with the West Indies and ripe for wider trading ventures. Ship-building had already come to be one of the important activities of the colony during the preceding decade. The population was 7181, of which 426 were blacks. R. I. Col. Recs., IV. 55-59; Arnold, History of Rhode Island, I. 488-491.

84. Act of the General Assembly, February 17, 1712.[1]

And whereas, there was an act of Assembly made at ————, in the year ——, entitled an act, etc.:

It was then and there enacted, that for all negroes imported into this colony, there shall be £3 current money, of New England, paid into the general treasury of this colony for each negro, by the owner or importer of said negro; reference being had unto the said act will more fully appear.

But were laid under no obligation by the said act, to give an account to the Governor what negroes they did import, whereby the good intentions of said act were wholly frustrated and brought to no effect; and by the clandestinely hiding and conveying said negroes out of the town into the country, where they lie concealed:

For the prevention of which for the future, it is hereby enacted by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the publication of this act, all masters of vessels that shall come into the harbor of Newport, or into any port of this government, that hath imported any negroes or Indian slaves, shall, before he puts on shore in any port of this government, or in the town of Newport, any negroes or Indian slaves, or suffers any negroes or Indian slaves to be put on shore by any person whatsoever, from on board his said vessel, deliver unto the naval officer in the town of Newport, a fair manifest under his hand, which shall specify the full number of negroes and Indian slaves he hath imported in his said vessel, of what sex, with their names, the names of their owners, or of those they are consigned to; to the truth of which manifest so given in, the said master shall give his corporal oath, or solemn engagement unto the said naval officer, who is hereby empowered to administer the same unto him; . . .

But if the said master shall refuse to give to the said naval officer such a manifest as aforesaid, or to swear to the said manifest when so delivered to the said naval officer, then upon complaint of said naval officer, (whose oath shall be sufficient evidence in this case,) to the Governor, or in his absence, to the next officer of the peace in the town of Newport, the Governor, or the officer to whom the complaint is made, shall immediately issue out a warrant of distraint unto the sheriff or his deputy, to apprehend the body of the said master, and him to commit to Her Majesty's jail, there to remain without bail or mainprize until he hath paid the full sum of £40 current money, of New England, to the treasurer of this colony, for

And when the said master hath delivered his said manifest and sworn to it, as abovesaid, and before he hath landed on shore, or suffer to be landed, any negroes or Indian slaves as aforesaid, he, the said master, shall pay to the naval officer the sum of £3 current money, of New England, for each negro; and the sum of forty shillings of the like money for each Indian that shall be by him imported into this colony, or that shall be brought into the colony in the vessel whereof he is master.

But if he hath not ready money to pay down, as aforesaid, he shall then give unto the said naval officer a bill, as the law directs, to pay unto him the full sum above mentioned, for each and every negro and Indian imported as above said, which bill shall run payable in ten days from the entering the manifest as above said; and if at the end of the ten days, the said master shall refuse to pay the full contents of his bill, that then the said naval officer shall deliver the said bill unto the Governor, or in his absence, to the next officer of the peace, as aforesaid who shall immediately proceed with the said master in the manner above said, by committing of him to Her Majesty's jail, where he shall remain without bail or mainprize, until he hath paid unto the naval officer, for the use of this colony, double the sum specified in his said bill, and all charges that shall accrue thereby; which money shall be paid out by the said naval officer, as the General Assembly of this colony shall order the same.[2] . . .

87. Act of the General Assembly, July 15, 1715.[1]

This Assembly, taking into consideration that Newport is the metropolitan town in this colony, and that all the courts of judicature within this colony are held there; and also, that it is the chief market town in the government; and that it hath very miry streets, especially that leading from the ferry, or landing place, up to the colony house, so that the members of the courts are very much discommoded therewith, and is a great hindrance to the transporting of provisions etc., in and out of the said towns, to the great loss of the inhabitants thereof:

Thereof, be it enacted by this present Assembly, and by the authority thereof it is enacted, that the sum of £289 17 s. 3 d., now lying in the naval officer's hand, (being duties paid to this colony for importing of slaves),[2] shall be, and is hereby granted to the town of Newport, towards paving the streets of Newport, from the ferry place, up to the colony house, in said Newport; to be improved by their directors, such as they shall, at their quarter meetings appoint for the same.

And whereas, there was an act of Assembly, made at Newport, in the year 1701-2,[3] for the better preventing of fraud and coven, in paying the duties for importing of negro and Indian slaves into this colony, and the same being found in some clauses deficient, for the effecting of the full intent and purpose thereof;

Therefore, it is hereby enacted by the authority aforesaid, that every master of ship, or vessel, merchant or other person or persons, [87] [1] "Proceedings of the General Assembly, 1715," R. I. Col. Recs., IV. 191-193.

[2] Since this includes duties on Indian as well as negro slaves it does not make certain the number of negro importations.

[3] One is tempted to dismiss this as a misprint for 1711/2, since the act of that date certainly reads as if it were the first legislative attempt to prevent fraud in the payment of the import duties on slaves.

importing or bringing into this colony any negro slave or slaves of what age soever,[4] shall enter their number, names, and sex in the naval office; and the master shall insert the same in the manifest of his lading, and shall pay to the naval officer in Newport, £3 per head, for the use of this colony, for every negro, male or female, so imported, or brought in. And every such master, merchant, or other person, refusing or neglecting to pay the said duty within ten days after they are brought ashore in said colony, then the said naval officer, on knowledge thereof, shall enter an action and sue the recovery of the same, against him or them, in an action of debt, in any of His Majesty's courts of record, within this colony.

And if any master of ship or vessel, merchant or others, shall refuse or neglect to make entry, as aforesaid, of all negroes imported in such ship or vessel, or be convicted of not entering the full number, such master, merchant, or other person, shall forfeit and pay the sum of £6, for every one that he shall refuse or neglect to make entry, of one moiety thereof to His Majesty, for and towards the support of the government of this colony; and the other moiety to him or them that shall inform or sue for the same; to be recovered by the naval officer in manner as above said.

And also, all persons that shall bring any negro or negroes into this colony, from any of His Majesty's provinces adjoining, shall in like manner enter the number, names and sex, of all such negroes, in the above said office, under the penalty of the like forfeiture, as above said; and to be recovered in like manner by the naval officer, and shall pay into the said office within the time above limited, the like sum of £3 per head; and for default of payment, the same to be recovered by the naval officer in like manner as aforesaid.

Provided always, that if any gentleman, who is not a resident in this colony, and shall pass through any part thereof, with a waiting man or men with him, and doth not reside in this colony six months, then such waiting men shall be free from the above said duty; the said gentleman giving his solemn engagement, that they are not for sale; any act or acts, clause or clauses of acts, to the contrary hereof, in any ways, notwithstanding.

Provided, that none of the clauses in the aforesaid act, shall extend to any masters or vessels, who import negroes into this colony, directly from the coast of Africa.[5]

[4] In practice, infants were not subject to the duty. "It is ordered by this Assembly, that the duty of two sucking slaves imported into this colony by Col. James Vaughan, of Barbadoes, be remitted to the said James Vaughan." R. I. Col. Recs., IV. 209.

[5] This exemption may imply a desire to foster a trade not yet flourishing. There is little evidence to show the amount of direct trade between Africa and Newport at this time, or between Newport, Africa, and the West Indies. Robert Grieve,

And it is further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the money raised by the impost of negroes, as aforesaid, shall be disposed of as followeth, viz.:

The one moiety of the said impost money to be for the use of the town of Newport, to be disposed of by the said town towards paving the streets of said town, and for no other use whatsoever, for and during the full time of seven years from the publication of this act; and that £60 of said impost money be for, and towards the erecting of a substantial bridge over Potowomut river, at or near the house of Ezekiel Hunt, in East Greenwich, and to no other use whatsoever.

And that Major Thomas Frye and Capt. John Eldredge be the persons appointed to order and oversee the building of said bridge, and to render an account thereof to the Assembly; and the said Major Frye and Capt. Eldredge to be paid for their trouble and pains, out of the remaining part of said impost money; and the remainder of said impost money to be disposed of as the Assembly shall from time to time see fit.[6]

88. A Minute of the Society of Friends, 1717.[1]

Newport, 1717.

A weighty concern being on this Meeting concerning the importing and keeping slaves. This Meeting therefore refers it to the con-in an article on "The Sea Trade and its Development" (Edward Field, State of Rhode Island, 1903, II. 402), seems to imply that the assiento granted by the treaty of Utrecht to Great Britain stimulated Rhode Island commerce. Indirectly and after some years this may have affected the profits of Rhode Island traders somewhat, but in so far as it is possible to judge from existing material there is little to support the opinion that a direct increase in Rhode Island slaving resulted from the contract of 1713. In the "Remonstrance" of Rhode Island against the continuance of the Molasses Act, in 1764, the implication is that the people of the colony regarded 1723 as the year in which their trade to the African coast became one of importance.

[6] At the meeting of the Assembly of May, 1716, it was reported that there was not sufficient money from the impost on negroes to meet the payment of £60 here ordered, and the Assembly voted to take £20 from the general treasury to make good the deficiency. In October, 1717, the Assembly ordered that £100 from the imposts on slaves be paid to the overseer who had charge of paving the Newport streets. The act was modified June 18, 1723, when it was "Voted, that Mr. Daniel Updike, the attorney general, be, and he hereby is ordered, appointed and empowered to gather in the money due to this colony, for the importation of negroes, and to prosecute, sue and implead such person or persons as shall refuse to pay the same; and that he be allowed five shillings per head, for every slave that shall be hereafter imported into this colony, out of the impost money; and that he be also allowed ten per cent. more for all such money as he shall recover of the outstanding debts; and in all respects to have the like power as was given to the naval officer by the former act." In June, 1729, it was provided that half the duty on slaves was to be set aside for the paving of Newport streets, the other half for the support of "the great bridges on the main, in the country roads". R. I. Col. Recs., IV. 209, 225, 330, 424.

[88] [1] R. M. Jones, The Quakers in the American Colonies (1911), p. 157. In 1727 the Yearly Meeting voted: "It is the sense of this Meeting, that the importation of Negroes from their native country and relations is not a commendable nor allowable practice and that practice is censured by this Meeting." The difference in the wording of this suggests that the direct importation from Africa may have become more common sideration of Friends everywhere to waite for the wisdom of God how to discharge themselves in that weighty affair, and desires it may be brought up from our Monthly and Quarterly Meetings to our next Yearly Meeting, and also that merchants do write their correspondents in the islands and elsewhere to discourage their sending any more (slaves) in order to be sold by Friends here.

[89] [1] Boston News Letter, June 5, 1721. John Menzies, judge of the vice admiralty court in Boston, on July 20, 1721, wrote an account of the events which in all probability led to this sale. Two Whipples, Christopher Almy, and Norton were concerned in a vessel which had been seized by the pirate Roberts off St. Lucia. After six or seven weeks the pirates captured a Dutch vessel, loaded it with sugar, cocoa, and negroes, and sent Norton off to dispose of the cargo. He anchored in Tarpaulin Cove, between Rhode Island and Massachusetts, and here his confederates sent sloops to convey the goods to Providence Plantations. The attention of the customs officers of both Massachusetts and Rhode Island was attracted and that portion of the cargo not already disposed of was seized. Acts of the Privy Council, Colonial, VI. 135-136.

[2] Cocoa and sugar were also put up for sale under the same conditions.

Value, if no Owner appear, (tho' their Charter contains no such Priviledge or grant:) The Judge considering these proceedings to be an unjustifiable incroachment upon His Majesty's Right, and the Authority of the Court and Jurisdiction of Admiralty by him Constitute; as also considering a Publication of Articles or Conditions of sale put up and signed by John Wanton and Nathaniel Kay Esqr; in other Terms than the said Judge had ordained, and whereby they had appointed two parts of the produce to be Lodged in their own hands, and the third to be given to the said Governour, And this, notwithstanding that the Judges Decree as to the Negro's was upon an Information laid by the said Kay in the Court of Admiralty: As also considering that Thomas Flower surveyor and searcher at this Port had refused to deliver supplies of the Cocoa and Sugars condemned to be sold upon a Libel filed at his instance: He the said Judge did Ordain the said Wanton, Kay and Flower to be summoned before him, to answer for their contempt of the said Decrees, and disobeying the Authority and Jurisdiction of His Majesty's said Court; And upon their Non Appearance the Judge Amerced the said Thomas Flower in 10 l. Nathaniel Kay in 50 l. and John Wanton who persevered in his contempt and threatened the Marshall of Court with Imprisonment for offering to serve the citation against him in the like sum of 50 l.

It is also observable, That this Day and the Day preceeding, the Doors of the Court-house were shut up and the Judge of Admiralty denyed access thereunto, unless he would comply with their Acts of Council, which to him appeared a betraying of the trust reposed in him, if he should have complyed therewith, and therefore was obliged to hold the Court elsewhere.[4] [91] [1] Newport Hist. Soc., Redwood Letter-Book, no. 644, pp. 4, 5. The Byam family was a numerous and important one in Antigua. The elder Edward Byam had been president of the Council of Antigua and lieutenant governor of the Leeward Islands. A few months after the date of this letter he was commissioned lieutenant governor of Antigua. The writer of the letter was probably his son Edward, who acted as attorney for Redwood.

Abraham Redwood, sr., born in Bristol, Eng., once the commander of a vessel trading between London and Jamaica, later a planter in Antigua, had removed first to Salem, then to Newport, some years before this. He retained his extensive sugar plantations, and since it is with plantation affairs that many of the letters of this correspondence deal only a few of them have been printed in the Rhode Island material. Abraham Redwood, jr., merchant and philanthropist of Newport, was born in Antigua, educated in Philadelphia, married and settled in Newport. Newport Hist. Mag., I. 7-16; Commerce of Rhode Island, I. 1 n.

[2] As Redwood's wife was Martha Coggeshall, Daniel was doubtless a connection of his. In the letter of Apr. 11, 1731, a part of which follows, Nugent writes of loading goods for "your brother-in-law Mr. Coggshell", who, according to the editor of Commerce of Rhode Island (I. 16 n.), was David Coggeshall.

[92] [1] News Letter, May 6, 1731. The account is signed by George Scott.

[2] The first notice of this disaster appeared in the News Letter, Apr. 29, 1731.

Ninety six Slaves (thirty five of which were Men.) On the 6th of said Month at half an hour past four of the Clock in the Morning, being about 100 Leagues distant from the Land, the Men Slaves got off their Irons, and making way thro' the bulkhead of the Deck, killed the Watch consisting of John Harris Doctor, Jonathan Ebens Cooper, and Thomas Ham Sailor; who were, tis thought, all asleep. I being then in my Cabin and hearing a Noise upon Deck (they throwing the Watch overboard) took my Pistol directly, and fired up the Scuttle which was abaft, which made all the Slaves that were loose run forwards except one or two Men (who seemed to laugh at the Cowardice of the rest, and defiance of us, being but 4 Men and a Boy) who laid the Scuttle, and kept us down confin'd in the Cabin, and passing by the Companion to view us, we Shot two Men Slaves.

On so sudden a surprize, we were at a loss what to do, but consulting together, filled two round Bottles with Powder, putting Fuses to them, in order to send them among the Slaves, with a Design at the same instant of Time, to issue out upon them, and either suppress them or loose our Lives; but just as we were putting our design in Execution, one of the Slaves let fall an Ax (either thro' accident or design) which broke the Bottle as Thomas Dickinson was setting fire to the Fuze, and taking fire with a Cagg of Powder, in the Cabin, rais'd up the Deck, blew open the Cabin Doors and Windows, discharged all our fire Arms but one, distroyed our Cloaths and burnt the Man that had the Bottle in his hand in a most miserable manner, and my self with the rest very much hurt thereby.

Upon this unhappy accident, we expected no less than immediate Death, which would have been unavoidable, had they at that Juncture of time, rushed in upon us. And being in this consternation and hopeless, sent up the Boy in order (if possible) to bring them to Terms, but they slighted our Message. And soon after (the Smoke clearing out of the Cabin) we found the other Bottle of Powder which by Providence had not taken fire, and which put new Life and vigour into us, that we were resolved to withstand them to the uttermost; and accordingly Loaded our Arms and Shot several of the Slaves, which occasioned all the Men Slaves to betake themselves to the Quarter Deck, over our Heads. The Slaves then got two Swivel Guns, and filled them almost full with Powder, which they found in the fore Hold, as they were looking for Provisions, and designed to blow the Bulkhead in upon us, which they put fire to several times, but could not get off by reason of wet Weather. We had two Carriage Guns in the Boat, which we expected the Slaves would get out, and therefore watched them very narrowly; but in a dark Night they effected it, and brought them upon the Quarter Deck; they loaded one of the Guns, and pointed it directly down the Scuttle: we hearing them about the Scuttle and having prepar'd ourselves; so soon as they lifted it up, we Shot the Man dead that pointed the Gun, another of the Slaves standing by clapt a Match to it and fir'd it off, which blew the Scuttle all to pieces and some of the Deck, but did us no Damage. They then took pieces of Boards and laid them over the Scuttle and the Hole they had made in the Deck, and laid the Tarpawlin, with a great Weight upon them to prevent our coming up.

Then they made Sail (as they thought) towards Land and were continually heaving down Billets of Wood, and Water into the Cabin, with intention to Disable us and spoil our small Arms. And the Fourth Day after the Rising made the same Land we departed from, then stood off and on again for 4 or 5 Days more, in which time the Boy being forced by Hunger, run up among the Slaves, who immediately put him in Irons. They made several attempts to come down into the Cabin, but their Courage fail'd them. I then call'd to them to come down to decide the Matter, they answer'd, by and by.

Finding our selves grow very weak, thro' these hardships, and for want of sustenance; we thought it proper before our Strength was quite spent to take some desperate Course. I proposed to cut away the Cieling and bore some Holes thro' the Vessels Bottom, which being approved on, was directly done, and let in about three feet of Water, I then called to the Slaves, and told them, I would drown them all, which frighted them exceedingly: They then sent the Boy to the Cabin Door, to tell us, that they had but just made the Land, and that when they got a little nearer the Shore, they would take the Boat and leave them with the Young Slaves: I told them if they would do that I would not sink her. (My design in letting the Water in, was to force the Vessel on her side that we might get some advantage.) They stood in for the Land about 12 a Clock at Night, struck upon the Bar of Serrilone River, and were in great Danger of being lost. The Vessel being strong beat over the Bar, and they run Ashore about 3 Leagues up the River, on the North Side; being then High Water, and at Seven a Clock the next Morning there was not above a foot of Water along side.

The Natives waded from the Shore with fire Arms, wou'd have fain try'd to overcome us, but were perswaded from it by the Slaves on Board, who told them we should shoot them if they appeared in our Sight. They perswaded the grown Slaves to go Ashore, and drove the Young ones over board and then followed them, making the Vessel shake at their Departure. Our Boy assuring us the Slaves had all left the Vessel, we immediately went up with our Arms, and saw the Slaves just Ashore. We found our great Guns loaded quite full. And as we hoisted out our Boat, the Natives mustered very thick on the Shore and fired at us divers time. We made what haste we could to the other side of the River, where we Rowed down about two Leagues, and found a Sloop riding in French-man's Bay belonging to Montserat, James Collingwood Commander, where we refreshed our selves, being all of us in a weak and miserable condition, having had nothing to subsist upon, during the Nine Days we were under this Affliction but Raw Rice.

[2] News reached Newport in October, 1732, that Captain Perkins had been killed on the coast on Apr. 27, 1732, in a negro uprising on his vessel (Weekly Rehearsal, Oct. 30, 1732; News Letter, Oct. 27, Nov. 2. 1732; South Carolina Gazette, Dec. 9, 1732). Items concerned with the slave trade were copied from paper to paper in the colonies, so that whatever information reached America from Africa was thoroughly disseminated.

Malbone of Rhode Island) in his Passage from Guinea to Barbados, having on board 55 fine Slaves in Lat. 9 Long. 37 was over set and all the Slaves Drowned, the Capt. with 8 Men, after being 6 Days in their Boat, 3 Days of which without Victuals and Drink, got safe to the West Indies." News Letter, Mar. 6, 1740.

95. Order of the General Assembly, June, 1731.[1]

Whereas, James Cranston, naval officer of the colony, has set forth to this Assembly, that near a twelve-month since, one Mr. Royall imported into this colony forty-five negroes, on which there was a duty of £3 per head, and not long after, sixteen of said negroes were transported into the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, where there is a duty payable also; and prayed for directions how to proceed in said affair.

Upon consideration whereof, it is voted and ordered, that the duty to this colony of the said sixteen negroes transported into the Massachusetts Bay, as aforesaid, be taken off and remitted; but that he collect the duty of the other twenty-nine.[2]

96. Act of the General Assembly, May, 1732.[1]

Whereas, there was an act made and passed by the General Assembly at their session, held at Newport, the 27th day of February, 1711, entitled "An act for laying a duty on negro slaves that shall be imported into this colony," and this Assembly being directed by His Majesty's instructions to repeal the same;

Therefore, be it enacted by the General Assembly, and by the authority of the same it is enacted, that the said act, and every clause and article therein contained, be, and it is hereby repealed, made null and void, and of none effect for the future.[2]

They are described by Bryan Edwards as "the most docile and best-disposed Slaves" brought from Africa. Edwards, History of the British Colonies in the West Indies (1794), II. 73-74.

[2] There seems to be no evidence that this act of repeal encountered any objection on the part of the colony. Her ready compliance with the royal instructions was later cited as a proof of merit by James Martin, secretary of Rhode Island, in a letter to Richard Partridge, colonial agent: Sept. 6, 1734, "This Colony always paid a due Deference and Regard to any Orders and Instructions either from his Majesty or the Board of Trade And did imediately upon Receipt of an Order from that Board repeal an Act for laying a Duty upon Slaves imported here" (Gertrude S. Kimball, Correspondence of the Colonial Governors of Rhode Island, I. 63-64). The prompt repeal of the duty is also referred to by the governor on Dec. 1, 1735, in response to a question from the Board of Trade, when he wrote: "We had only a Duty of £3 per head on Negroes imported from the West Indies (and then exempted therefrom All directly from Africa) Which Act was immediately repealed upon the receipt of an Order from Your Hon'ble Board" (ibid., I. 73). It is entirely probable that it was by this time obvious, both to the Rhode Island merchants dealing in slaves and to those interested in the revenues of the colony, that importation into Rhode Island was, and would continue to be, inconsiderable and that the repeal of the duty act was a matter of small consequence. Johnston's implication that an increase in trade resulted from the repeal can hardly be supported by the evidence which he cites. When Governor Hopkins wrote of eighteen vessels annually sent to the coast he was not referring to the trade into Rhode Island alone but to those vessels which carried negroes to the West Indies as well, a point which Johnston does not make clear ("Slavery in Rhode Island," R. I. Hist. Soc., Pubs., new ser., II. 124). It is however true that the increase in the negro population of Rhode Island between 1730 and 1748 was surprisingly large. In 1730 there were 1648 blacks, in 1748, 3077. Updike calls attention to the fact that the enumeration for 1730 did not include the towns east of the bay, a fact which would account for part of the increase. Updike, Narragansett Church, I. 169.

[97] [1] For the accounts which follow the editor is indebted to Professor B. M. Bigelow, of Brown University, who came upon them among miscellaneous papers in the Newport Historical Society. They are apparently sheets from a trade-book, possibly made up some years after the trade, since items of 1740 and 1741 appear along with those of 1733 and 1736. Some of these items seem to have little to do with the slave trade. The editor has taken the liberty of arranging the entries in so far as it was possible according to date. On a separate sheet, not here printed, the item "To what Expended on the Snow Unity" appears once or twice but it is not clear that the trade here described is that of the Unity.

[2] The surmise of the editor is that the "30" should in each case be 80.

[3] The name Joseph Scott is written several times across these accounts.

[98] [1] R. I. Hist. Soc., Letter-Book of James Brown, 1735-1739. This is an undated fragment, without superscription, placed between letters of Mar. 28, and Apr. 6, 1736. On Apr. 9 Brown wrote to a Mr. Marcy that he could spare no more rum, since he was himself fitting out a vessel with rum. The reference in the two letters is undoubtedly to the Mary, which sailed for Africa in 1736, with John Godfrey as captain and Obadiah Brown as supercargo (see Gertrude S. Kimball, Providence in Colonial Times, 1912, pp. 245-248; also, post, no. 101). James and Obadiah Brown, brothers, were in business together at this time. After the death of James in 1739 Obadiah carried on the business, first alone, then with the four sons of James—Nicholas, Joseph, John, and Moses.

The group of Newport captains engaged in the slave trade before the Revolution, to which Cahoone belonged, was superior to many of the men concerned in this traffic. Most of them were members of the Fellowship Club of Newport, the rules of which precluded gaming, drunkenness, quarrelling, and all oaths. To this society they contributed 6 d. for each month of a successful voyage and received aid after an unsuccessful one. Among the members are found: Abraham All, Charles Bardine, Peleg Clarke, John Jepson, Thomas Carpenter, Caleb Gardner, Jeremiah Clarke, William English, Peter Dordin, James Duncan, George Champlin, and six members of the Wanton family. *Newport Hist. 100. Vessels of Godfrey Malbone, 1737-1738.[1]

Newport, Rhode Island, February 21 [1737].

We are also inform'd from Guinea by the way of the West-Indies, That the Scooner Haddock, belonging to Capt. Godfrey Malbone of New-Port, was over-set and intirely lost, having on board Eight Slaves and a Quantity of Gold Dust; one Aldridge Master and all his Hands only saved.

Rhode Island, June 2 [1738].

By a private Letter from the West Indies, to a Gentleman here, we are inform'd, That a very fine Sloop belonging to Capt. Godfrey Malbone of this Place was totally consum'd by the Lightning on the Coast of Guinea, with a great many Negroes on board. Capt. Caleb Godfrey, Commander, and his Company saved their Lives by taking to the Long Boat.

[2] The French were at this time not only making inroads on the English trade in the region of the Gambia River, where the two nations were always rivals, but were attempting to gain a foothold on the Gold Coast, probably in order to meet the needs of Louisiana and their Sugar Colonies. Of any move which suggested French aggrandizement in Africa or in the West Indies the English were instantly suspicious. Adam Anderson, Origins of Commerce (Dublin, 1790), III. 483.

[100] [1] News Letter, Mar. 3, 1737, June 8, 1738. Godfrey Malbone, of Virginia birth, was a picturesque privateer and slave trader of Newport for more than twenty years. Redwood purchased a negro from him on Oct. 29, 1733, paying £90 (Wetmore Papers, vol. 1). Edward Peterson tells that on one occasion a slaver owned by Godfrey and John Malbone was attacked by pirates, whereupon the captain offered freedom to all the slaves who would join in defending the vessel. The enemy was repulsed, and the freed slaves settled on the Malbone estate in Pomfret, Conn. History of Rhode Island (1853), p. 103.

Newport Feb. 27th 1737/8.

My dear friend, I have wrote you Several letters lately and very largely about all your affairs so have now but little to add especially since I have wrote you and Colo Tessalissour [?] in Company relateing your Snow Martha and Jane and Inclosed all her accounts in said letter. I have to the Utmost of my power Endeavoured to fit her in the best and Cheapest manner I Could but her Charge notwithstanding Runs high. I must as a Sincere friend tell you I wish you were Clear of her She is an Unlucky Changable Beast She has never got you any thing and I am afraid She never will and if my advice is worthy of your Notice I would not Send her another Guinea Voyage for by frequent advices from thence there is no prospect of makeing a Voyage I Should much reather if I might have my Choice that you would Load her of your Plantation and Com home in her your Self. I firmly believe it would be to your advantage. . . .

103. Francis Wilks and Zachariah Bourryau to Abraham Redwood, 1740.[1]

London, 25th Jany 1739/40.

Sir, . . . The foregoing is Copy of our last, since which we had your favour of the 22d Augt. pursuant to which we made 1000 Insurance for your Accot on the Snow Martha and Jane, Francis Pope, at and from Rhode Isl'd to Africa West Indies and Rhode Island as £13 pCt. which was the best terms I could get it done.[2] . . .

104. Abraham Redwood (?) to James Woodcock, 1740.[1]

Newport on Rhode Island April 4th 1740.

Dear Friend, . . . I took some pains in the Affair, shewd the goods to several Persons, one of whom was Capt: Mallbone, the most considerable Trader of any here to the Coast of Guinea . . . the highest he offered for them was 430 per Ct, [?] he said it was not a proper Sortment, and that some of the Goods were charged too high 15 per Ct. I tried our other Traders to Guinea, who made the same Objections that Capt. Mallbone had done and some of them said the Goods looked as if they had been already on the Coast. . . .

[102] [1] Newport Hist. Soc., Lopez Letter-Book, no. 621, p. 1. The presence of this letter in the Lopez Letter-Book would indicate that it was written to Aaron Lopez, and it is thus listed in the index, yet this can hardly be the case. Lopez did not come to Newport until 1752, which makes it highly improbable that any Newport merchant should in 1738 urge him to "come home." The fact that Redwood owned a West Indian plantation, the produce of which could be loaded for Rhode Island, and that he possessed a Martha and Jane makes it reasonable to surmise that the letter was written to him, though its presence in the Lopez Letter-Book goes unexplained.

105. Captain Francis Pope to Abraham Redwood, 1740.[1]

Antigua May 24 day 1740.

D'r Sir, I wrote to these few Lines that I have discharged the most Part of my People and the second mate being sick I discharged him to come home and paid Sum of them hear and Sir I have drawe orders upon you to Pay the Second mate sixty five pounds four shillings and the Carpenter seventeen pounds thirteen shilling and eigh[t] pence Rhoad island Currancy [2] which I hope you will except the order and Pay them for I think to keep as few men as Possable for tis to your advantage and wee have nineteen slaves unsold but hope to sell them in a very Little time.[3] . . .

106. Captain George Scott to ——, 1740.[1]

June the 13th 1740 At Sea Latt. 8 30 N., Long. 39 30 W.

Gentlemen, Meeting with this oppertunity I was very glad to acquaint you of our Miserable voyage. We left Anamabo the 8th of May, with most of our people and Slaves Sick, we have Lost 29 Slaves, our purchase was 129. My Negro Bonner is Deed, the Slaves we have Left is now I think all recovered. We have five thats Swell'd and how it will be with them I cant tell, we have one-third of dry Cargo Left, and two hhgs. rum, if I had Staid there to a sold I believe we should [have] Lost all our Slaves. I think to [105] [1] Redwood Letter-Book, no. 644, p. 71. On Feb. 7, 1739, William Byam, either cousin or nephew of Edward, wrote to Redwood that Gold Coast negroes were in demand and that if Captain Pope should arrive before long he would do very well with his cargo. Ibid., p. 61.

[2] At the beginning of the century the equivalent of one ounce of silver was about 8 s., by 1730 it was about 20 s., and by 1740, 27 s. Redwood was one of the group of Rhode Island merchants who had in 1732 opposed further currency issues. Richman, Rhode Island, pp. 71-72.

[3] On June 8 and 29 there are letters to Redwood, apparently from Pope, in which there is mention of various misfortunes connected with his arrival in Antigua, but no reference to his cargo. On July 14 he wrote that he had taken on a cargo of rum and sugar, probably from Redwood's own plantation, and was about to sail for Newport.

[106] [1] R. I. Hist. Soc., G. C. Mason, Reminiscences, III. 218. The letter bears no endorsement of any kind. With some changes it was printed in Mason's "African Slave Trade" (Am. Hist. Rec., I. 317). On Apr. 9, 1740, Captain Scott had written to his brother Daniel from Anamabo that he had on board 60 men, 20 women, and some boys and girls. He had not yet decided whether to carry the cargo to Jamaica or Virginia. Ibid., I. 342-343.

proceed for Antigo and fitt the Sloop and take the other trial on the coast, it will not doe to give out for one bad bout. If i goe directly back I'll sell the rum for gold if i gitt but twenty pence a gallon for it before i'll by slaves, the slaves thats Died I blieve there was none above twenty two years old and none under fourteen. I have sent by Capt. Lindsey Sixteen Ounces of gold, wich is all. I wrote you by Capt. Kinecutt who saild the 10th April, I have repented a hundred times the bying of them dry goods, had we Layed out two Thousand pound in rum bread and flower, it would purchased more in value then all our dry goods. I have paid a great part of the wages. My Serviss to all Freinds, pray Excuse all blunders for I am now aboard Capt. Lindsey and in haste to gitt aboard.

P. S. If I cant sell at Antego, so as I think is a good price I'll go to Jamico. G. S.

Capt. Eldred Shipt by me four Ounces gold wich I have sent by Capt. Lindsey to Mr. Ayrault. G. S.[2]

107. John Gunthorp to Abraham Redwood, 1740.[1]

Antigua July the 22th 1740.[2]

Deare Abraham, . . . I am heartilly sorry Pope has againe made you so bad a Voyage too and from the Coast of Guinea, Especially as I am given to understand, you have made a considerable purchase of lands in Rhoad Island and depend in a greate measure upon the returns of your Guinee cargoes to fullfill your engadgments therein wch faling short so greatly of yr expectations, must be a very greate disapointment to you; I hoape there is no occasion for a Friends advice to you, to pursue the Guinea trade no further, under the direction of Capt. Poape, who experience may teache you from your severe sufferings therein, has not the qualifications necessary to carry on that trade to advantage, surely he must think himself well rewarded and recompensd for any merit or claime he is intitld too, if you keepe him imployed in a small sloope, carrying your effects backwards and forward from your Towne to this place.[3] . . , [2] On July 14, 1740, Henry Bonnin of Antigua wrote, probably to Redwood, that he had heard from Captain Scott, who was then at St. Eustatius, with forty slaves still to be disposed of. He hoped there to obtain rum for his next voyage to Africa. Redwood Letter-Book, no. 644, p. 33.

[107] [1] Redwood Letter-Book, no. 644, p. 74.

[2] One of the characteristics of the slave trade in the 'forties was the increase in the number of colonial vessels engaged in it. David Crichton of Cape Coast Castle, writing in 1744 of the arrival of a French man-of-war, stated that at that time there were one Bristol vessel and five from Boston and Rhode Island anchored under the Castle guns. Public Record Office, Admiralty Papers, 1, Aug. 25, 1744.

[3] Captain Pope had been master of vessels in which Redwood was interested at least since 1731. Eight years before this Gunthorp had written a very different estimate of his ability: Apr. 23, 1732, "I should not doe Captain Pope justice if I did not acquaint you of his Diligence in your bussiness, and singular care and regard to your interest, and take my word for itt, that whenever you part with him, you will scarse meet with his equal for fidelity to serve you." Commerce of R. I., I. 29.

108. Joseph Manesty to John Bannister, 1745.[1]

Liverpool Augt. 2d 1745.

Sir, I desire you will order Two Vessels built with the best white Oak Timber at Rhode Island, both tobe Square stern'd with 2½ and 3 Inch plank with good substantial bends or Whales. they are for the Affrican Trade to have middling bottoms to have a full Harpin and to carry their Bodies well forward and in the upper work not so much tumbled in as common for the more commodious stowing Negroes twixt Decks. To have snug heads without Rails, plain sterns, firm Quarter pieces no Quarter Windows nor Joiners work in the Cabbin (except so much as to sit in the Cabbin Windows) to Stern with a Tiller over the Round house to be sheath'd on the Stocks.

58 feet long in the Keel
10 feet hold
5 feet twixt Decks

Main Mast 60 feet long, Main Yard 44 feet long, Main Top Mast 30 feet long all the other Masts and Yards in proportion, each Yard Arm 2 feet a Rising on the Quarter Deck and fore Castle 10 inches, bulk heads to be a Solid beam a half Round house 12 feet long on the sheets, the Gun Wall on the Main Deck 14 Inches Solid, on the Quarter Deck and forecastle 4 Inches, but the Timbers left high enough to Support Rails all round the Vessel for Guns 2½ feet from the Gunell, the Round house to be 2½ feet higher than the Quarter Deck 5½ feet high in the inside under the Beams, to have the same rounding on the Top as the other Decks, for messing Negroes on lower deck laid fore and aft. let them be ready for Launching in August next, to be Coated with Pitch and Tarr and I will send over Cordage, Sails, Anchors, Nails, and such a Cargoe as you shall order and will send a Master if required to go hence about April next.

109. Joseph Manesty to Joseph Harrison, 1745.[1]

Liverpool Septem'r 10th 1745.

Sir, Above you have a Copy of an order which I gave to Mr. John Banister and inclos'd you have Invoice of a parcel of Goods ship'd [108] [1] Newport Hist. Soc., John Bannister Letter-Book, no. 66, p. 2. Joseph Manesty, a Liverpool merchant, is best known as the friend and employer of John Newton during his slaving career (this work, II. 496). Gomer Williams occasionally refers to him as connected with the commercial ventures of Liverpool (History of the Liverpool Privateers, 1897, pp. 82, 149, 496, 518). John Bannister (or Banister), whose grandfather and father had been Boston merchants, came to Newport sometime after 1733. In 1739 he was in London, probably to arrange connections for the business which he was establishing in Rhode Island. Not only merchant but privateer, he was at one time concerned in three privateering vessels. Darius Baker, in his sketch of the "Newport Banisters," describes him as of "marked business ability, active, alert, shrewd, bold and masterful." Newport Hist. Soc., Bulletin, no. 43, p. 5.

on the Queen Elizabeth Capt. James Neal which I desire you will make the most of for my Account and take all opportunities of causing the Carpenters etc to take Goods on acco't of these Vessels. . . . You will find some Nails in my Goods which I intend to be used in my Two Vessels and Expect you will manage so as to make the Sheating Nails and single Spikes do for Sheating them and if any more is wanting we can easily mend it here. I wou'd not have any Bolts in the Butts I think it quite needless for double Vessels. as you said Iron was as cheap with you as here I have not sent any so leave that part to your discretion but as Insurance is very high wou'd have as little money laid out on the Vessels as possible and if heads to them will be any Charge above £4 Sterling a Ship don't put any more than a piece before the Stern for Securing Gamaning of Bowsprit. as both Ships are design'd for Guinea a great regard must be had to the goodness of their Masts on the whole. the good opinion of your knowledge and integrity has put me on this Scheme so I make no doubt of your Executing it in a frugal Suitable manner. . . . shou'd it happen that a Vessel of or near the Dimentions of one of these order'd can immediately be bought Cheap [2] with you or of any other Size suitable for Affrica I shou'd choose to do it and build only one if that can be done. . . .

110. Instructions to Captain Pollipus Hammond, 1746.[1]

You being Master of our Sloop Anstis and ready to Sail our orders are that you imbrace the first oppertunity and make the best of your way for the Coast of Africa when please God you arrive there dispose of our Cargoe to the best advantage, make us returns in Negroes, Gold Dust and whatever you think will answer. If you have a good Trade for Negroes may purchase forty or Fifty Negroes. get most of them mere Boys and Girl, some Men, let them be Young, No very small Children. make all possable Dispatch, take care of your Vessells Bottom. If you meet with disapointment in your Trade architect Peter Harrison, was at this time a Newport merchant. He later became collector of customs in Boston.

[2] G. C. Mason cites one Rhode Island vessel which was to cost £24 old tenor per ton in 1747. Five years later a sloop could be built in Newport for £27 per ton, a "double decker" for £34 per ton, while in Swansea, in the upper part of the province, the prices were one-fifth less. William Ellery, the owner of the Anstis and the signer of this letter, was a graduate of Harvard College, a successful Newport merchant, judge, and lieutenant governor, and the father of the signer of the Declaration of Independence. The sloop here mentioned may have been named after his daughter Anstis. The invoice of its cargo, consisting of rum, pork, beef, tar, flour, tobacco, and sugar, amounted to £7064 8, of which £6421 7 was in rum.

[2] Similar instructions were given to Captain Hammond for the brig Success, three years later: "if you can manage your business so as to come home to us in a suitable time of Year than return home to us and bring as many Slaves as you think proper, if you think it will be most to our advantage than proceed to the West Indies and try your market and dispose of our Slaves to the best advantage. if you think proper bring us home some likely Boy Slaves" (William Ellery and Co. to Pollipus Hammond, Jan. 4, 1749, Ellery Letter-Book, no. 82). The Success had for some years been trading to Surinam and Jamaica. This is the first evidence of a voyage to Africa. Captain Hammond however had been sailing to Guinea since 1732.

Liverpool, June 14, 1747.

. . . no trade push'd with so much spirit as the Affrican and with great Reason. a Vessel I sent from hence in June last is arriv'd at St. Kitts makes £13,000 Sales out of a Cargoe £1800. Exchange at St. Kitts 60 per Ct. and is now daily expected with every Farthing remitted in Sugar which will more then make that Money Sterling. Our Advises from Jamaica inform that Gold Coast Negroes sells from 48 to £55 a head . . . as all our Guinea Effects for next Crops are Order'd hom in Sugar freight will be 10 to 12 per Ct. which will be a noble thing.[2] . . .

115. John Bannister to Hubert Lascelles, 1747.[1]

1747 Nov. 14.

. . . You have undoubtedly heard the Merchants of Jamaica have agreed to supply the Royal Company of the Havannah with Negroes and provisions, upon which acco't they sent to Kingston Don Pedro de Estrada [2] a Spanish Gentleman to reside there and manage

[2] Later in the summer Bannister wrote: "Capt. Edward Lewis of your Town thinks her a fine Roomly Vessel for the Guinea Trade and I am satisfied she'll carry more Negroes of her Burthen than any Vessel built in these parts for the Trade" (Bannister to Pardoe, July 23, 1747, Bannister Letter-Book, no. 66, p. 32). The builder of the ship was Goddard.

[114] [1] Bannister Letter-Book, no. 66.

[2] Over a year before (Feb. 7, 1746) Manesty had written: "Ships are so scarce here that none is to be had at any rate or I should have engaged one this spring, but the price of negroes in the West Indies has made ships unfit for the business to be made use of so that I fear it will not be in my power to get one, but I will if I can." Some months later he added, "I have had returns for cargoes to Affrica and several parts of the West Indies in the course of 12 months at great profit". On Apr. 3, 1747, "Negroes at Jamaica 50 to £55 a head bought on the Coast of Affrica at from £4 to £6 a head" (Baker, "Newport Banisters," Bulletin, no. 43, p. 4; Bannister Letter-Book, no. 66). It was no wonder that Bannister, in receipt of such letters, himself entered the Guinea trade about this time: "I have this season a large navigation to the West Indies on my own account, which will enable me the next year to enter upon the Guinea trade with advantage." Bannister to Scott, June 19, 1747, Bulletin, no. 43.

[115] [1] Bannister Letter-Book, no. 66. Lascelles had just gone from London, where Bannister had known him, to Jamaica.

[2] Don Pedro de Estrada had been known a few years before as the daring commander of a privateer (Jameson, Privateering and Piracy, p. 399 n.). The privileges of the assiento were formally surrendered by the South Sea Company in 1750. They had not been exercised for some years before that. For a brief account of the Cuban slave supply see this work, II. xliv-xlvi.

the Affair for the Company. at present they only receive Negroes from Jamaica and procure the provisions from the northern Colonies, for which purpose a Commission with Blanks for the Names of the Vessels and Captains etc. is sent signed per the Governour and Countersign'd by Don Pedro de Estrada from whom such a Commission may be obtain'd by a person that is well acquainted with him, which Commission must be sent here by a safe hand. a Blank must likewise be left for either Snow, ship, Brigantine, or Sloop etc., also the Person who is to manage the business with Don Pedro De Estrada must agree with him the Price of Flower, Beef, Pork, Butter, Cheese. . . . mayn't be amiss to recommend to your consideration, namely the Importation of Negroes directly from the Coast of Guinea to the Havannah and upon the present View I am of the opinion it will be advisable to interest some Spanish Gentlemen of Interest in the Scheme. . . .

116. John Bannister to Philip Houghton, 1748.[1]

Newport January 28 [1748].

Sir, . . . as there [is] now a Confirm'd peace I shall be glad of your further direction Concerning the Guinea Vessell, if it be agreeable I shall be willing you have halfe of either Capt. Stanton or Godfrey ['s?] Brigg for that Purpose, to be Sent out on their Return to this port. Cap Godfrey is as good a Master and Sutable for Such a voyage, being well acquainted as any man In the Country. I would allso further Propose to Keepe a Double Deck Vessell of about 150 Tons full built Continually Running from this port to Lucea.[2] She may Conveniently make Two Voyages yearly, and in which Cace the business must be very Proffitable not only on Acco't of her making Two Voyages in a Season as our vessells make but one, but such a vessell as I propose full built will Cary upwards of 300 hhd besides the peoples Previledge and Sail with less hands then Some of our Sloops that wont cary more than halfe and into the bargain the ware and Tare not more than halfe what a Sloops is. Further if at any Time molasses want to be had She might take afreight home and Return here with a load of Coal or Salt. I . . . propose at Jamaica you have the Consignment so that the master will have Nothing to doe but to Navigate backwards and forwards and such a man I can Procure that will Serve our purpose. I also propose a Laden Shall be allwayes Ready on the Vessells Arrival that she might with safe[ty] make Two voyages as aforesaid. this

[2] Post-Boy, May 11, 18, 25, 1752.

[119] [1] R. I. Hist. Soc., Mason, Reminiscences, II. 80. Lindsay, master of the Sanderson, had written a melancholy letter from Anamabo in February. Trade was dull, his men were ill, his small cable was worn out. He then had on board sixty-one slaves. At that time there were at Anamabo Captains Hamlet, James, Jepson, Carpenter, and Butler; Gardner was due; Ferguson had gone to leeward (Commerce of R. I., I. 59-60). His letter of June 17, with some changes, was printed by Mason in the American Historical Record (I. 339), where Mason uses the names William Johnston and Peter Brown in place of those of Wilkinson, Ayrault, and any other owners of the Sanderson.

[2] Susanna and Elias Merivielle had written to Lindsay's Rhode Island owners, Mar. 16 and Apr. 27, giving the prices prevailing in Barbados. Not long after the second letter, Susanna, the senior partner, died, leaving her son to continue the business. Mason, Am. Hist. Rec., I. 339.

[3] Elias Merivielle reported to Wilkinson and Ayrault the sale of 47 negroes from the Sanderson—14 men, 9 women, 11 men boys, 8 small boys, 2 girls, 3 small girls, amounting to £1432 12 6. The prices ranged from £35 to £21. The charges included payment for permission to land the slaves, a duty of 5 s. per head, payment to the drummer who attended the sales, for liquor at the sales, for carrying notes into the country, for the captain's commission of £55 2 2, and the commission on the sales, the total being £142 15 3. Lindsay took on board 55 hhds. rum, 3 hhd. and 27 bbl. sugar, amounting to £911 17 2½; the remainder he took in bills. On his return to Rhode Island he was placed in command of the schooner Sierra Leone, 40 tons, owned by Newport and Boston merchants. Am. Hist. Rec., I. 339-340.

[120] [1]R. I. Hist. Soc., Mason, Reminiscences, II. 70, 96 . A most interesting comparison can be made between the slave trade of a New England city and of a French port by a study of Gaston Martin's Nantes au XVIIIe Siècle: l'Ère des Négriers (Paris, 1931) with the Newport material here printed.

[2]The five missing women make it impossible to check the account.

[3]On July 13 Livingston wrote to Messrs. Peleg Thurston and Company, owners of the Elizabeth, lamenting the meagre proceeds of this sale, which he attributed to the fact that the slaves were "no better than refuse". He had loaded on the Elizabeth 90 casks of molasses and had paid Captain Carpenter £464 10 5½ for the use of the snow. N. Y. Pub. Lib., Mason, Reminiscences, I. 62.

[121] [1] New York Historical Society, Slavery MSS., box VI. We know that the Hare was preparing for an African voyage on June 1, 1754; by September, 1754, the vessel had reached the West Coast. There Captain Godfrey traded until some time in February, 1755, in which month he sailed for South Carolina. His trade here was completed in April and he returned to Newport. By October, 1755, he was making ready to obtain a second cargo from Africa, which he sold in Charleston in June and July, 1756. This portage bill may have been for the voyage of 1754. It is undated and is endorsed, "Recd. of Mr. Robt. Stevens, Sixteen pounds In part of the within Portage Bill." Three coats, 4 jackets, and 10 shirts had been advanced to these men, charged at £105. 10. The following merchants sold rum to the Hare for her Guinea voyage: George Gardner, Richardson, Jonathan Thurston, Thomas Cranston, David Earl on Cranston's account, Benjamin Green(?), and Nathaniel Coggeshall (ibid). The scrap of paper which contains this information also lists the provisions carried by the Hare—beef, pork, bread, flour, hams, tobacco, and sugar. Students of the slave trade may profitably examine the account of the voyage of the Perle, which traded on the West Coast about the same time that the Hare trafficked. See M. Léon Vignols, "La Campagne Négrière de la Perle (1755-1757)," Revue Historique, CLXIII. 51-78.

[122] [1] William Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 91. Thomlinson, Trecothick, and Company were London merchants. For the career of William Vernon see G. C. Mason's Annals of Trinity Church, first ser., p. 153 n.

[2] In 1754 Evan Malbone and Ebenezer Flagg appraised the sloop Sherbro, William Brown late captain, just back from Africa, at £2100 old tenor. This was the property of Jacob Rodriguez Rivera and William Vernon. N. Y. Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI.

[3] Obadiah Brown's Insurance Book (R. I. Hist. Soc.) contains a record, Feb. 29, 1753, of insurance on the "Cumberbus, 500 at 10 pr Ct from the cost of Africa to Jamaica".

[4] The connection between Captain Godfrey and the Vernons had existed for ten years when this was written. On June 10, 1744, when the Vernons were looking about for a captain for one of their ventures, William wrote to Samuel, "I think Caleb Godfrey is a very good man" (Vernon Letter-Book, no. 652, p. 4). Letters written by Laurens to the Vernons indicate that he did not think highly of Godfrey's ability to select a cargo. The Hare had completed this voyage and was in Newport preparing to sail again on Oct. 17, 1755, when the Vernons once more requested insurance, for Africa, and from thence to Charleston, £200 on Vessel and £400 on cargo, "covered free of the Premo". This they apparently did not receive because of the war rates (post, no. 140).

It is somewhat surprising that up to this time there is little evidence that South Carolina was regarded by the Rhode Island merchants as a desirable market for their slave cargoes, since there is ample indication that there was commercial intercourse between the two colonies. The Bannisters had consigned a cargo (not a Guinea cargo) to George Austin in 1740. In that year they had also delivered a "negro man Ruby," to Capt. William Barnes for sale in South Carolina, at £35, the proceeds to be invested in whatever would be advantageous (Bannister Letter-Book). William Vernon had been in South Carolina in 1746. Vernon Letter-Book, no. 78.

[2] Lindsay wrote to his owners from Cape Coast Road on Jan. 8, 1755, that he had on board 57 slaves and was leaving the coast, as were Buffam and Wanton. From this voyage he returned to New England in April, 1755, and sailed for Africa again in August, instructed by Wilkinson and Ayrault to sell at Barbados or St. Christopher, whichever promised a better return (Commerce of R. I., I. 64; Mason, "African Slave Trade," Am. Hist. Rec., I. 341). In April, 1756, 44 slaves from the Sierra Leone were sold at St. Christopher, at prices ranging from £20 for boys and girls to £34 for men and £30 for women. After paying the commissions due on this cargo the bill in favor of the owners was £1082 18 2. To this £54 13 7 was shortly after added for the sale of three "refuse slaves" from the cargo. Captain Lindsay carried back to Rhode Island sugar, rum, and molasses amounting to £635 14 10. The owners recorded the receipt of these returns on June 24. Ibid., I. 342.

Newp't 9th Janry 1755.

S'r, This Advises you that we have a Sloop upon the Coast of Africa, Caleb Godfrey Com'dr who have ordered to your Place with his Slaves, and have taken the Freedom to recommend to your Address for Sales and Returns, Rec'd a Letter from him of 7th Sept'r and may reasonably expect he will be with you in March (no Accident happening to him). For the Proceeds of his Slaves wou'd have good Ster'g Bills of Excha., reserving sufficient to load him with Rice Home. Shou'd there be a few small Slaves that will not sell for much with you choose he shou'd bring them here if he has any Screvelios Teeth or Camwood wou'd not have them sold. Our Agreem't with Capt. Godfrey for his Comm. and Priviledge are in these Words, "It is Agreed that your Priviledge be six Slaves, if you think proper to purchase them, to be shipd and purchasd in common with the Cargo, and to bear an equal Proportion of Loss, by mortality or otherwise" etc . . . agreable to which he'l conform, As we are convincd nothing on your Part will be wanting for our Int.

127. Samuel and William Vernon to Captain Caleb Godfrey, 1735.[1]

Newp't, 10th Jan. 1755.

S'r, This will be d'd you by Mr. Gabriel Manigault to whom have wrote and advis'd of our recommend'g You to his Address, we have omitted saying anything to him of your expectations of draw'g part of the Comm. for Sales of your Slaves. But as you'l find him a Gent'n of the utmost Generosity and Goodness you'l meet with no Difficulty with him on that or any other Account. We recommend to you the utmost frugality in your Expences upon the Vessel during your stay there and that you'l make all the Dispatch in your Power.[2] . . .

[126] [1] William Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 51. This letter, with those of Apr. 15, 1756 (post, nos. 131, 132), disproves the statement that Gabriel Manigault of Charleston, S. C., never traded in slaves. D. D. Wallace, Life of Henry Laurens (1915), p. 74.

[127] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 52.

[2] The writers then repeat the instructions concerning small slaves and other commodities. On the same day a second letter directed that Godfrey take on at least six weeks' provisions, and assured him that he would find letters in South Carolina awaiting him.

[6] On July 17 Laurens also sent to the Vernons the final account of the sale of the Hare's cargo, £8706 17 8 currency, minus various charges, which left a balance in favor of the Newport firm of £4414 6 10. Here he repeated the account, which he had already written, of Benjamin Yarnold's purchase: "You'll please to observe in the Sale a Negro Girl was sold to Benj Yarnold for £180 and we credit you £150 retaining by guess £30 to cure her of a shocking disorder. It was so managed that the Girl had not the least appearance of any disorder in the Yard and the very next day was unable to stir with the foul disease, the purchaser sends her back to us and we refusd to receive her but thought ourselves obliged to consent to refer the matter to two or three Impartial Judges, these ordered that she should be cured at the expense and Risque of the Owners." The Vernons are mistaken in thinking that the girl is dead when they write on June 18, for on July 24 she is still living, and Laurens is hopeful of her recovery (Laurens Letter-Book, II. 271, 275). On Aug. 31 Laurens reported the net proceeds of the sale of 46 negroes as £5436 4 2; against this he charged £234 19 for coast commission, £1968 10 1 for two bills of exchange, and £230 3 stg., leaving a balance in favor of Messrs. Thompson of £1467 19 1. Ibid., II. 303.

Newp't 15th April 1756.

S'r, By the Time this may reach you we have Reason to expect Caleb Godfrey Master of our Sloop Hare will be arrivd at Charlestown from the Windward Coast of Africa (no Misfortune happen'g to him). The last year he went to the Address of Gabriel Manigault Esq but that Gent. declining Business has determind us now to recommend him to yours, in the disposal of his Slaves. The knowledge our W. V. hath of your integrity, joind with the strong inclination Capt. Godfrey expressed of going to your Address, convinces that nothing on your Part will be wanting that can prevent giving us intire Satisfaction. We beg leave to remark that it has ever been the Custom from this Place, when a Cargo of Slaves are sold in any of the West India Islands, that the Master has a part of the Comm. which Mr. Manigault declind allowing to Godfrey, which we was really sorry to find, as his repeated misfortunes had reducd him to low Circumstances, for which he was the more to be pityed as he had a Wife and a numerous Ofspring depending on him for thair Support, which had that Gent. been apprizd of we are convinced his humane and benevolent Disposition woud have extended to his relief in a good degree, and make no doubt of finding the same inclination in you. Mr. Manigault remitted the Nt. Proceeds of the above Cargo in good Bills of Excha. except the Sloops Load of Rice,[2] what Slaves he Sold on Credit he deducted 6 PCt per Annum Intr't and advancd the Money, which we was content with. And now desire if possible to have the Nt. Proceeds of this Cargo remitted immediately to Messrs. Thomlinson Trecothick and Co. Merch'ts in London for our Acc'ts in good Bills reserving a sufficient to load her with Rice and about 20 bbs. good Pork if to be had reasonable; desire you to take four Bills of each sette two Bills to be forwarded by you to the above Gent. the other two forward to us here, beg all unnecessary Expences may be carefully avoided and that you'll give him all possible Dispatch. Please advise us per all Opp'tntys of your Market for Slaves etc. As [we] have several Vessels gone to Africa whom we have orderd to Barbados, for Instructions where to Proceed, and if your Market will Answer shall Order them thither, its probable one may be with you this Fall and two early in the Spring all from the Gold Coast, be pleasd therefore to be particular and frequent in your Advices. The inclosd Paper is Copy of our Agreement with C. Godfrey for his Comm. and Priviledge to which he will conform, We also inclose a Letter to him which on his Arrival please deliver thus you will Oblige [3]

132. Samuel and William Vernon to Gabriel Manigault, 1756.[1]

Newp't 15th April 1756.

Sir, Your highly esteemd Favour of 12th April Ult. we duly recd. with a particular Account of the Sales of the Sloop Hare's Cargo of Slaves also your Remittance for Nt. Proceeds in Bills Rice etc, which gave intire Satisfaction. We have not been so Complaisant in writing to you as might reasonably be expected for which neglect beg your Pardon. Are sorry it is not agreable to you to continue in Business any longer, as we deem it a public Loss. We expect Capt. Godfrey will be at Carolina by the Time this meets you or not long after with another Cargo of Slaves, have recommended him to the Address of Mr. Geo. Austin, hope you will not be backward in affording him your Advice and Assistance, so far as you may think

133. Samuel and William Vernon to Thomlinson, Trecothick, and Company, 1756.[1]

Newp't 20th April, 1756.

Sirs, We recd. your Fav. of 10th Dec. per Capt. Warner via Boston advising us of your not having made any Insurance on the Hare Capt. Godfrey, owing to the extravagant Preemio demanded per the Underwriters. The great length of Time between his Sailing and the receipt of your L[ett]re would not admit of risqueing our Interest any longer without Insurance, as there was a great uncertainty whether you would be able to get it done even at 20 Guineas should we desire it, therefore omitted answering your Letter concluding it would be safer and more for our Interest to get it done here. We this day had Advice of his being safe arriv'd upon the Windward part of the Coast, and that he is likely to do well and make good Dispatch, and dont expect he will be obligd to proceed down to the Gold Coast on which Account imagine the Risque is not so great. Have now to request of you to get Insurd on him £600 (free of the Preemio) at and from the Coast to Charlestown in So. Carolina on as easy Terms as possible. If the Underwriters make any Difference between Slaving to Windward and proceeding down to the Gold Coast it will be best to make the Insurance conditionally altho we are pretty certain he made his Trade to Windward, and suppose he is off the Coast before now.

134. Henry Laurens to Samuel and William Vernon, 1756.[1]

12th June 1756.

Samuel and William Vernon, Rhode Island
per Boardman

Gent'n, Your kind favr. of the 15th of April to our G. Austin did not reach us till the 24th Ult and to which we have not had an opportunity of replying before this which goes for New England. We hope you must have had information long before this how much the price of Slaves has been affected here since People no longer doubt that the present contests between us and France must come [133] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 59. The superscription is "To Messrs. Thomlinson Trecothick and Co. London, via N. York Capt. Wm. Richards." The insurance to be placed was £200 on vessel, £400 on cargo.

[134] [1] South Carolina Historical Society, Laurens Letter-Book, II. 245. This letter could with equal appropriateness be placed in volume IV. of this work, "South Carolina", but it has seemed best to combine the material relating to the trade of the Hare.

suddenly to an open Rupture, the Rice planter in such case must act with great care and prudence to defray the unavoidable expences of his Family and the Indigo Planter has not any motive now to give a price for Slaves because a War Freight and Insurance must greatly reduce the price of that Commodity and its not at all improbable but that such Quantitys of it will be made in time of War that the European Markets will be reduced to a lower Ebb than has been the case for many Years past. From viewing things in this light, which every considerate person must do, We may without the spirit of Prophecy pronounce that the Sales with us this Summer must become wretchedly bad and we could not wish to see your Vessell the Hare with us or one of any of our Friends on any consideration whatever. this we foresaw many months ago and took the most effectual method to stop all the Ships we usually had but it unfortunately happens for us that we have 8 or 900 Slaves absolutely ordered down to us that we did not at all expect and so near at hand that We may every day reasonably look for them all and this at a time when our Planters are so discouraged that there was not Twenty appeared at a Sale of 350 Slaves ten days ago,[2] a large part of which are unsold and another Cargo to be shewn next Week.[3] last Summer they would almost go to Loggerheads for the first choice and let them have such as they liked we might almost fix our own price. but 'tis all at an End and must remain so till the Storm that hangs over us shall be quite dispelled wherefore We say—We hope you would get tidings of this great alteration of things in time to reach Capt Godfrey with a Letter to shape his course for some more promissing Market as it would be of great service to yourselves and infinitely more agreeable to us than to see him now here on the Terms we have fixed as the Standard'd of our Engagements for African Consignments—that is—to give the Vessell a Load of such produce as can be obtained, to pay the Capts. Coast Commission, Mens half Wages, Disbursements and etc. and to remit the residue as the time of payment shall grow due, tis our Interest to sell for the quickest payment we can without prejudice to the Sale, as the shorter the Term the less risque of bad debts. Mr. Manigault is a Gentleman can at all times advance Sums of Money without any inconvenience to himself, but it cannot be done by those who are professedly African Factors. We experimentally know that a large Capital is requisite to negotiate a Trade in this Country for 7 or 800 Negroes a Year in the way we take them but a more material consideration with the Factor is this, the probabillity of War affecting the Exchange. Last Year and for many preceeding Exchange was 700 per Ct. in last January it jumpd to £712.10/. suppose it had come to 800 which was not impossible from such an Event, what had he gaind who had sold a Cargo of Slaves and remitted at 7 when perhaps 2/3 of his money was not due before Exchange was 8. As to Mr Manigault refusing to allow Capt Godfrey a Share in his Commission, you must highly commend him for it, he is a Gentleman that does as many Acts of benevolence as any one in this Country and therefore would be the last rather than the first to introduce a Custom bad in its consequencys. It often proves a Bribe of great prejudice to Owners of Ships. We will venture to say some Ships intended for this place have stopd in the West Indias for that perquisite to the Captain to the loss of Thousands to the Concerned. This we know so clearly that no Man should sell a second Cargo for us who should tempt a Master to betray that great trust we reposd in him by that or any such like method.

[2] Probably this was the cargo of the Benn, sold by Middleton and Brailsford of Charleston.

[3] That of the Hope, William Lugen, to be sold by Inglis and Pickering of Charleston.

If Capt Godfrey should touch in the West Indias he must hear that our Markets are over and we hope he will find himself at liberty to embrace that Market that shall promise most for your Interest, every thing would be against him was he now to come here, Rice grown very scarce, most of it of a very ordinary Quality the price 35 and rising daily. If he should come We shall do for you the very best We can and put you on the footing of our old and fast Friends.

135. Samuel and William Vernon to Thomlinson, Trecothick, and Company, 1756.[1]

Newport Rhde. Island 12th June 1756.

Sirs, We just now Recd. a Letter from Caleb Godfrey of our Sloop Hare Dated at Sierralon on the Coast of Affrica the 8th of April Informing us of his being Slav'd his Vessel in good order and Clean Tallowd and that he expected to Sail the next for Carles Town So. Carolina therefore Shou'd this Reach you before any Insurance is made by you on S'd Vessel we desire the Sum of £600, Vizt. £200 on Vessel and £400 on Cargo may be made for us from Sierralon to Charles Town Free of the Preemio.[2]

P. S. As the Risq. to So. Carolina in Case of a War with France is not so great as to any part of the West Indies we Imagine the Prem'm Will be the easier.

[135] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 97.
[2] On p. 60 of the Letter-Book is another letter of the same date which duplicates this, save that the order is for £800 insurance, £600 of which was on the cargo.

136. Samuel and William Vernon to Austin and Laurens, 1756.[1]

Newp't 18th June 1756.

Gentlemen, Your Favour of the 22d Jan'ry Ult. wth two Bills Excha. amounting to £568 7 5 Sterling or £3978 11 11 Curr'cy wth your Comm. amount'g to £198 18 7 is £4177 10 6. we recd. and make no doubt of their being duly Honourd 'ere this. You observe to us that the Girl sold Benja. Yarnold is since Dead, that you had prevaild on him to submit the Matter to Arbitration, that is whether he shoud pay for her or not. We dont imagine whether he bought the Girl at a Public or private Sale that you warranted her to be perfectly sound and well—wch is not customary for new Slaves, and whether we are not intitled to as much compassion as he is—or whether he cant afford to bear such a Loss as well as we are we cant say. These things we think are quite foreign from the Dispute. We conceive it in this Light, if you wch we dont suppose, contrary to all Custom of the Sale of New Slaves, Warranted the Girl to be sound and well and she provd to be otherwise in Justice he ought not to pay for her, on the contrary, we are not to lose her for it is beyond all doubt if Slaves were thus warranted, they [would] yeild a Trice in proportion. Upon the whole therefore we expect that he is held obligd to pay for the Negro, and as you was so kind as to consent to pay the Doctor and stopd £30 for that end we willingly consent to it, tho' at the same Time think it unprecedental. Shoud be glad to have the Accots closd and the Ball'ce remitted in Rice if any oppertunity shoud present imediately, otherwise in Dollars.[2]

137. Henry Laurens to Samuel and William Vernon, 1756.[1]

Samuel and William Vernon Rhode Island
per Edgecomb

Gentlemen, . . . We are now to inform you that on the 29th Ulto. the day appointed for the Sale of your Slaves We had as many Purchasers appeard as we could have wishd for had we had three times the number for Sale but on taking a transient view of them before they were landed many of them became extreamly angry that we should invite them down from 80 or 90 Miles distance

[136] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 62, "To Austin and Laurens in So. Carolina."
[2] On June 18 Laurens wrote that the Hare had arrived in ten weeks from Sierra Leone, with 70 negroes, and that the sale was advertised for the 29th, the earliest date at which the quarantine law would allow it (Laurens Letter-Book, II. 249). The advertisement for this sale adds to the usual notice, "To be sold upon easy Terms". South Carolina Gazette, June 17, 1756.

[137] [1] S. C. Hist. Soc., Laurens Letter-Book, II. 259.

to look at a parcell of refuse Slaves as they call'd them and with some difficulty were prevail'd on to wait the Sale. They really were not much out for when Ten or fifteen were drawn out they deserved no better a Character. We were willing to believe Capt Godfrey obtaind the best he could but really they were a wretched Cargo, such a one as we would not have touchd could we have been excusd from it for three times our Com'n.

We have this day sold 42 to the Amt. of £7455.12/. Currency, in which two are included that sold at Vendue for only £35.12/. They seemd past all hopes of Recovery. God knows what we shall do with that remain, they are a most scabby Flock all of them full of the Crockeraws—several have extream sore Eyes, three very puny Children and add to this the worst infirmity of all others with which 6 or 8 are attended (vizt.) Old Age—those the Vessell brought last Year were very indifferent but these much worse. Poor Godfrey seems greatly distressed that he should not have been able to do better, his People have all left him except his Mates, they were going to put him into the Admiralty for some treatment that appeard to us a little too rough therefore We recommended that he would give them their discharge as the only thing would pacify them, are in hopes Capt Godfrey will be able to pick up hands in their stead on moderate terms. We laid in a Cargo of our best Rice for the Sloop at 40/ per Ct. as soon as we found it would be higher. This lies ready for him so that he may load away as quick as he pleases and we should wish he may do it soon as we have advice by a Ship in six Weeks from Bristol that War was declared in London the 18th May. We had a Sloop arrivd with 150 prime Slaves from the Factorys at Gambia and Bance Island the Evening before the Sale of your Negroes which would not at all have injurd your Sale had they been good, for we did not discover what a prime parcell they were till the first days Sale was over. We are not much afraid of making a pretty good Sale of this Cargo notwithstanding we are engaged in War if we can but draw down but half the number of Buyers we had on the Twenty ninth Ultimo, 'tho should not wish to receive any more Cargoes the present Year as a few more would make them move very Slowly. All that we can further say is, that every thing has been done for your Interest that was in our power and that we shall continue so to act untill the business is compleated. We hope we shall be able to address you soon per Capt Godfrey who this day takes in 40 Barrels of Rice for a beginning.

138. Samuel and William Vernon to Austin and Laurens, 1756.[1]

Newp't 8th Decr 1756.

Sirs, We have before us you Fav'rs of the 17th and 24th July to which don't know of any oppertunity we have had of Answering until now unless it had been via N. York, or Boston. We are not in the least Jealous but that your best endeavours were us'd in the Sale of Capt. Godfreys Cargo of Slaves notwithstanding they were sold so extreme low as renderd it a very bad Voyage to us, therefore we are and ought to be content. Discovered no error in your Acc'tts unless it be 50 s overcast in Invo. of Rice. The Ball'ce remaining in our Fav. have wrote Messrs. Thomlinson and Trecothick and Co. of London woud be remitted to them by you in good Bills of Excha. in Jan'ry or Feb. without fail which make no doubt will be punctually executed. The Sum of £30, retaind by you on Acc'tts of a Girl sold Benja. Yarnold, if there be any saving you'll please to add to the Ball'ce. We already desird you to take 4 Bills of each Sett and forward two to London and the other two to us which will be comply'd with by you

If any prospects appears of Slaves being in Demand with you in the Spring pray advis us. . . .

139. List of Captured Slave Vessels, 1757-1758.[1]

The Success, Seth Harvey, master, was captured with 96 slaves, May 30, 1757, and carried into Martinico.[2]

The Marygold, William Taylor, master, having on board 80 slaves, was captured June 19, 1756, within twelve miles of Antigua. The captain wrote his owners that he left captains James, Hammond (Palsgrave), Pinnegar, Rodman, and Clarke on the Coast of Africa; that Clarke, when he left, had 40 slaves.

The Sirre Leone, David Lindsey, master, belonging to Philip Wilkinson, on May 27, 1756, on her voyage from the Coast of Africa

[138] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 61.

[139] [1] W. P. Sheffield, Privateersmen of Newport (1883), pp. 55-56. During the Seven Years' War Newport sent out more than sixty privateers. The French retaliated by attacks on the slave traders, who were in danger both on the African coast and in the West Indian waters. Owing to the nature of the trade, the convoy system was of little service to the slavers. So great became the risks that in January, 1759, the Browns of Providence were asked a 25-per-cent. premium on the Wheel of Fortune, Capt. William Earl, which they sent to Guinea (Kimball, Corr. Col. Govs. of R. I., I. xxxvii; Providence in Colonial Times, p. 270). For an excellent discussion of the difficulties which the British encountered in protecting the West Indian and North American commerce, see Sir Julian Corbett, England in the Seven Years' War (1907), I. 351-370.

[2] The manifest of this vessel will be found in Preston's Rhode Island and the Sea (p. 74), taken from MS. Notarial Protests, VI. 404. The owner was Benjamin Mason.

to St. Christopher's, was captured and carried into Guadaloupe.[3]

The Hawke, Owen Morris, master, on a voyage from the Coast of Africa with 75 slaves, April 4, 1756, was captured and carried into Martinico.

The Dolphin, George Nichols, master, was captured on the Coast of Africa, Dec. 3, 1756, carried into Goree, and condemned.

The Industry, Thomas Underwood, master, with a cargo of 107 slaves, bound from the Coast of Africa to St. Christopher's, was captured April 10, 1758.

The Prince George, John Peck, master, was captured and plundered on the Coast of Africa, Jan. 30, 1761; voyage broken up.

The ship C*aesar,* of Newport, Jeremiah Clarke, master, left the Coast of Africa, Sept. 22, 1761; had on board 116 slaves bound to the West Indies; was captured by a French cruiser, Oct. 30, off Cape St. John.

The Success, Nehemiah Rhodes, master, was captured on the Coast of Africa, July 8, 1761, having on board 43 slaves.[4]

The Two Friends, Polypus Hammond, master, with 130 slaves and 28 elephants' tusks, was captured June 20, 1727 [1757].

Annamaboo, Walter Buffum, master, with half cargo of slaves, was captured July 23, 1758.

The Fox, William Taylor, master, was captured at the same time and near the same place as the Annamaboo.

The King of Prussia, Joseph Wanton, master, with 54 slaves, 20 ounces gold dust, and 66 hogsheads of rum, was captured July 23, 1758.

The Young Batchelor, Samuel Johnston, with 60 slaves, captured Jan. 27, 1757.[5]

Casada Garden, T. Taylor, with 175 slaves, captured about the same time.[6]

[3] Lindsay gives the date as May 27, 1757, in his protest. He was carrying 58 slaves and ten ounces of gold dust. Preston, op. cit., pp. 82-83, from MS. Notarial Protests, VI. 454.

[4] Captain Rhodes's statement was that he sailed from Newport on July 8, 1760, and traded on the coast till Mar. 1, 1761. He was at that time driven on shore by a storm and his vessel plundered by natives. He reached Sierra Leone and embarked for Rhode Island with Captain Peck. Preston, op. cit., p. 82, from MS. Notarial Protests, VII. 340.

[5] The account of the capture of this vessel with 72 slaves on board is to be found ibid., pp. 80-81 (MS. Notarial Protests, VI. 413).

[6] The last two, not in Sheffield's list, are added from the Boston News Letter, June 23, 1757. For further references to the Casada Garden see post, no. 140. Captain Thurston, arriving in Newport late in April, 1757, had with him part of the crews of three English vessels captured by French men-of-war on their way to the Guinea coast. These captures may have been the work of the fleet under M. de Kersaint, which demoralized the African coast for a time (News Letter, May 5, 1757; Corbett, op. cit., I. 366). Preston (pp. 83-84) adds an account of the loss of the Camelion, Capt. Michael Molten.

141. Deposition of Joseph Wanton, 1758.[1]

I, Joseph Wanton, being one of the people called Quakers, and conscientiously scrupulous about taking an oath, upon solemn affirmation say that on the first day of the month commonly called April, A.D. 1758, I sailed from Newport in the Snow, King of Prussia, with a cargo of 124 hogsheads of rum, twenty barrels of rum, and other cargo; that on the twentieth day of the month called May, I made Cape Mount on the west coast of Africa; that I ran down the coast and traded until I arrived at Annamibo, where, while at anchor, on the twenty-third day of the month called July, when I had on board fifty-four slaves, twenty ounces of gold-dust, and sixty-five hogsheads of rum, I was taken by a French privateer of sixty guns, fitted out in Bordeaux, called Le Compte of St. Florentine, having on board between 500 and 600 men, while my vessel had but three small pieces and eleven men.[2]

142. Captain David Lindsay to his Owners, 1758.[1]

Barbadoss Aug't 19th 1758.

Gentlemen, thank God I have the pleasure once more to Give you a Line or Two in Regard to the Proceedings of my present voyage

[11] Endorsed: "Acct for the Owners of Ship Casada Gardin."

[141] [1] Kimball, Corr. Col. Govs., I. xxxvii-xxxviii. Joseph Wanton, the fourth Rhode Island governor to be drawn from the Wanton family, served in that office from 1769 to November, 1775. The date here given is that of the capture of the King of Prussia, not that of Wanton's deposition. It appears from an item in the News Letter of Aug. 4, 1757, that Wanton narrowly escaped seizure in 1757. Five Liverpool traders were seized while he was on the African coast.

[2] Sheffield (Privateersmen, pp. 28-29) says that Wanton "was left destitute on the coast of Africa, and soon after two other Newport vessels with their cargoes were captured at the same place. One of the vessels was given to a native African prince, and was by him turned over to the three crews, who, after a time returned home in her". See post, no. 143.

143. News Items relating to Slave Trade, 1758, 1760.[1]

Newport, Rhode Island, October 16 [1758].

On Saturday last came into this Port, from the Gold Coast of Africa, the Snow Fox. Capt. Wanton, who came in her, gave us the following Account: That the Count St. Florentine, designed for a Man of War, but purchas'd by some Merchants in Bourdeaux, commissioned for a Privateer, mounted with 60 Guns, mann'd with 550 Men, and commanded by Monsieur Montvit, took Capt. Earle of Providence on the 23d of June, and soon after drove on Shore, at Cape Mount, a ship of 200 Tons which immediately went to Pieces. She proceeded down the Coast to Annamaboa, where she arrived the 23d of June, and took Capt. Wanton in the Sloop King of Prussia; Capt. Buffum, in the Snow Annamaboa of this Port, and Capt. Taylor of New-London. On the 28th, the Harwich of 50 Guns, commanded by Commodore Marsh, in Company with the Rye, of 20 Guns, came down, when the Privateer was at an Anchor. . . . We cannot omit the following singular Instance of Benevolence and Humanity in Mr. Brew, Chief of Annamaboa Castle. The Snow Fox was purchas'd of the Captain of the Privateer, by the Dutch Chief of Coromantine Castle, of whom Mr. Brew bought her, and after supplying her with Provisions, generously made a Present of her to Capt. Taylor, in order to bring him Home, and the rest, who were taken by the Privateer; all of which, after this Misfortune, were treated with great Hospitality by the Gentlemen of the Coast, particularly by the Governor of the Cape Coast Castle.

Caleb Gardner, with 10 Slaves on board, Capt. Carpenter with 20 Slaves on board, Capt. Peter Allan, in a Brig, just arrived.

John Harwood [Howard] also informs us, That Capt. Congrell [Congdon?],[3] the Capts. Castle and Davis, from Liverpool, and a Brig belonging to Whitehaven, were lately taken on the Coast by a French Frigate; and that he heard a French Privateer had taken 10 Sail to Windward.

NEWPORT, December 13 [1762].[4]

Captain John Gardner, in the Ship Friendship, belonging to this Port, arrived at Guadaloupe the 2d of last Month, in 74 Days from the Coast of Africa, with 153 Slaves; he lost 38 on his Passage

NEWPORT, January 10 [1763].

By Letters from Santa Cruz, we are informed of the Arrival of the Brig Molly, Capt. John Allen, of this Port, at that Island, from the Coast of Africa. She was bound to Virginia, and arrived on that Coast in the Month of October last; and after beating near a Fortnight, was obliged to bear away for the West-Indies. We hear he has lost 24 Slaves.

NEWPORT, Rhode Island January 31 [1763].[5]

Since our last Capt. Arnold arrived here from South Carolina. The Brig Greyhound Captain William Pinnegar, of this Port was arrived there from Africa; also the Captains Freeman, Miller, Dolliver, and Davis from Boston; and Captains Larsher, Durfee, and Carpenter from this Port.

NEWPORT, Feb. 14 [1763].

The Captains Eliot and Carpenter, also of this Port, are arrived on the Windward Coast of Africa.

NEWPORT, September 5 [1763].

200 Gallons of neat Rum had been given per Head for Slaves, and scarcely to be got at any Rate for that Commodity. This must be sensibly felt by this poor and distress'd Government, the Inhabitants whereof being at this time very large Adventurers in that trade, having sent, and about sending, upwards of 20 Sail of Vessels, computed to carry, in the whole, about Nine Thousand Hogsheads of Rum, a quantity much too large for the Places on the Coast where that Commodity has generally been vended. We hear many Vessels are also gone and going, from the neighbouring Governments, likewise from Barbados, from which Place a large Cargo of Rum had arrived before our Informant left the Coast, of which they gave 270 Gallons for a prime Slave.

[2] This is signed by William Grant, called by Mason, "Hudson", a young man of Newport, who went to the coast intending to set up a business. There he found seven Rhode Island vessels and "the times very indifferent." After a brief period he secured work with Richard Brew and Company at £60 per annum. Three months later he died of coast fever at Gaboone. Mason states that the hogshead shipped contained 95 gals., while a slave cost 110 gals. The difference was charged to Hunter. Grant's slaves were sold after his death. Written on the bottom of Grant's original receipt is: "Newport July 5, 1764. Received from Mrs. Temperance Grant Eighty Eight Dollars as the full amount and produce of the Above Adventure. Wm. Hunter."

On Mar 23 Moses wrote that his half of the proceeds, in commodities or bills of exchange, was to be sent to his attorney in Rhode Island, and also reminded Champlin that he was to have a slave for his private venture. On Sept. 17 the Vernons again wrote to Adams, this time to say that they were sending him a number of fine young and healthy slaves by the Royal Charlotte, Captain Taylor (Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, pp. 110-111). This vessel cleared from Newport for Virginia on Sept. 19. In Virginia it was apparently loaded with wheat and lumber amounting to £737 4 10 and despatched to Cadiz. 156. Carter Braxton to Nicholas Brown and Company, 1763.[1]

Virginia October 16th, 1763.

Sirs: . . . I shall be very glad to be concern'd in the African Trade and will be a ¼ of the Voyage if you Choose it, Tobacco I can send any quan. at 20/ per hund. and I believe free of duty if yr. Skiper will take it. I shou'd choose to be Insur'd, and what ever Expence came to my Share more than the Slaves sent I wou'd remit by the Return of the Vessell that bro't the Slaves. The Whole of the Voyage I shou'd leave to you to Conduct and you may begin to prepare if you please, But you will let me know the Terms and every thing relating to the Voyage before the Vessill Sails. It ought to be forw'ded, so as to have the Vessill here in May, bec'se the Negroes will sell better then, than later. Gold Coast Slaves are Esteemed the most Valuable and Sell best. The Prices of Negroes keep up amazingly. They have Sold from £30 to £35 Sterling a head Clear of duty all this summer and I should not doubt of rendering Such a Sale if the Negroes were well and Come early. I find two or three Vessills have been here this summer from the Nw'd [Northward] and I suppose the Trade will be Carried on with more vigour for the future. If you will undertake to befriend me in soliciting the Consignment of some of them I will give you for your Trouble 1/3 of my Commission which will be a Pritty thing if the Vessill is Consign'd wholly to me. But if she is only half to me, I will give you 1/3 of my Commission's for all that you get and will make my remittance in any manner they desire.

Deposition of Captain Peter Dordin.

Peter Dordin doth upon Oath declare That he was in Georgia the latter End of January last when he fell in Company with a Captain of a Snow who arrived there from Antigua (whose name he can't remember) who told him that Capt. Rogers had met with a shocking Misfortune in going down to Antigua in losing Part of his Slaves etc. and that he had bought half a Dozen of his Slaves and (pointing to a Woman Slave then in the House where they were) said there is one of his Slaves which I have sold to the Master of the House: That he the Dept. enquired of the Master of the House what he gave for that Slave who told him fifty Pounds Sterling. And the said Peter Dordin doth further declare that Slaves during the last Winter bore a very high Price in Georgia And that he saw Five Slaves sold there who were picked prime Slaves for Fifty five Pounds Sterling and that good Slaves (Men and Women,) would sell from Thirty five to Forty five Pounds Sterling a Piece.

Deposition of Capt. Robert Stoddard.

Robert Stoddard doth upon Oath declare That some Time in December or January last he had some Conversation with Mr. Valentine Jones of Barbados Merch't at Barbados when the said Jones informed him that Capt. Thomas Rogers had been at Barbados a little while before with a Cargo of Slaves and that he the said Jones had advised the said Rogers to sell his Slaves at Barbados and that he told the said Rogers that he thought he would do better with them there than to carry them anywhere else and that he did not give him that Advice from any sinister Views but purely for the Benefit of his Owners. And the said Robert Stoddard doth further say That it was generally thought by the Masters upon the Coast that Capt. Rogers's Slaves were a very good Cargo of Slaves and that the said Jones told him that Capt. Rogers' Slaves were in bad Order when he arrived at Barbados.

Messrs. William and Samuel Vernon to ——.

Gentlemen, You will observe our positive Orders to T. Rogers, after stopping at Barbados to recruit his Slaves were to proceed to Georgia or So. Carolina unless he shoud meet with counter Orders at Barbados but as it was our fix'd determination that he shoud proceed to one or other of those Ports his Orders remaind in full force.

By his Letter of the 25th Septr. he arrivd at Barbados on that Day and by his Protest in Antigua he sail'd from Barbados on the 28th bound to the Island of St Christophers that on the first Day of Octr. an Insurrection of the Slaves happend (being let out of their Irons) by which he lost eleven Men Slaves [6] and four Slaves afterwards with the Flux as usual in such cases. he then proceeded to Antigua and gave the remd. of his Slaves away for a Trifling Sum— the Nt proceeds of his Cargo amounting to but £500 Ster'g in Bills paya. at 6 months sight whereas had he followed his Orders his Cargo of Slaves in Georgia would have neated us Eighteen hundred Pounds Sterling or more as some part of his Cargo arrivd there during Capt. Dordins lying there some of which sold at fifty Pounds Sterling per head as he informs us. You will be pleased farther to observe that we gave him One hundred Dollars to lay out in high Cloths at the Cape DeVerd Islands, what Cloths he purchasd there he purchasd with Goods and the Ball'ce of his Cash Trade there was in our Favor so that the whole of that 100 Dollars and more also he has traded on to his own Benefit, without the least Advantage to his Owners, and indeed is indebted for the Money to this Day.

[5] This letter bears no date, nor is there any clue as to the person addressed.

[6] Mention is made in the Lopez correspondence of a rebellion of the slaves under Captain Rogers in which thirteen jumped overboard, one was killed, and several wounded. See also Newport Mercury, Nov. 25, 1765.

his Letter Isle de los 5th Sept. he writes he had then on board 21 Slaves bo't at 80 Barrs. By his Book he gives an account of but 16 Slaves purchas'd out of wch Number he had exchanged one Man Slave for a Boat wch is 6 less than he had then on board, and all his Letters to us from the Coast convince us that this Book of Trade he has dd us is not Genuine but a patched up, counterfeit thing

Please to Observe by his Letter Dated at Barbadoes Sepr. 25th 1765 he says had call'd upon Mr. Jones for Letters that he expected we shoud Lodge with him and found our Letter, wherein we persist in his proceeding to Carolina, but he says he will go to the Leward Islands, Implying that we had no right to direct him, his saying his Vessel was Low [?] and his slaves weakly is no excuse. If that was really the case he might possibly have been justified, but he protested against those Articles at Barbados, but then certainly he could not have proceeded to any other Port but must have sold his Cargo at Barbados.[7]

160. Remonstrance of the Colony of Rhode Island to the Board of Trade, 1764.[1]

. . . It is this quantity of molasses[2] which serves as an engine in the hands of the merchant to effect the great purpose of paying for British manufactures; for part of it is exported to the Massachusetts Bay, to New York and Pennsylvania, to pay for British goods, for provisions and for many articles which compose our West India cargoes and part to the other colonies, southward of these last mentioned, for such commodities as serve for a remittance immediately to Europe; such as rice, naval stores, etc., or such as are necessary to enable us to carry on our commerce; the remainder (besides what is consumed by the inhabitants,) is distilled into rum, and exported to the coast of Africa; nor will this trade to Africa appear to be of little consequence, if the following account of it be considered.

Formerly, the negroes upon the coast were supplied with large quantities of French brandies; but in the year 1723, some merchants [160] [1] "Proceedings of the General Assembly, at South Kingston, the 24th day of January, 1764", R. I. Col. Recs., VI. 378-383. This remonstrance against the renewal of the Sugar Act the General Assembly voted to transmit to the colonial agent, Joseph Sherwood, who was to present it to the Board of Trade provided any three agents from the other northern colonies would join in the protest. The early paragraphs point out that Rhode Island, a small colony of barren soil, depends entirely on her commerce for subsistence, that she buys from Great Britain yearly in manufactured goods £120,000, and that all but £5000 of that sum must come from her molasses trade.

[2] Fourteen thousand hogsheads, 2500 of which came from the English islands. In the Moses Brown Papers, Misc. (R. I. Hist. Soc., I. 12), is a long paper on Rhode Island commerce, of nature similar to this, in which the author speaks of an importation of 6000 hhds. of molasses from foreign ports. See also F. B. Wiener, "Rhode Island Merchants and the Sugar Act", New England Quarterly, III. 488.

in this colony first introduced the use of rum there, which, from small beginnings soon increased to the consumption of several thousand hogsheads yearly; by which the French are deprived of the sale of an equal quantity of brandy; and as the demand for rum is annually increasing upon the coast, there is the greatest reason to think, that in a few years, if this trade be not discouraged, the sale of French brandies there will be entirely destroyed. This little colony, only, for more than thirty years past, have annually sent about eighteen sail of vessels to the coast, which have carried about eighteen hundred hogsheads of rum, together with a small quantity of provisions and some other articles, which have been sold for slaves, gold dust, elephants' teeth, camwood, etc. The slaves have been sold in the English islands, in Carolina and Virginia, for bills of exchange, and the other articles have been sent to Europe; and by this trade alone, remittances have been made from this colony to Great Britain, to the value of about £40,000, yearly; and this rum, carried to the coast, is so far from prejudicing the British trade thither, that it may be said rather to promote it; for as soon as our rum vessels arrive, they exchange away some of the rum with the traders from Britain, for a quantity of dry goods, with which each of them sort their cargoes to their mutual advantage.

Besides this method of remittance by the African trade, we often get bills of exchange from the Dutch colonies of Surinam, Barbice, etc., and this happens when the sales of our cargoes amount to more than a sufficiency to load with molasses; so that, in this particular, a considerable benefit arises from the molasses trade, for these bills being paid in Holland, are the means of drawing from that republic so much cash yearly, into Great Britain, as these bills amount to.

From this deduction of the course of our trade, which is founded in exact truth, it appears that the whole trading stock of this colony, in its beginning, progress and end is uniformly directed to the payment of the debt contracted by the importation of British goods; and it also clearly appears, that without this trade, it would have been and always will be, utterly impossible for the inhabitants of this colony to subsist themselves, or to pay for any considerable quantity of British goods.

[Of the fourteen thousand hogsheads of molasses annually imported, eleven thousand five hundred are brought from foreign plantations.]

The present price of molasses is about twelve pence, sterling, per gallon; at which rate, only, it can be distilled into rum for exportation; wherefore, if a duty should be laid on this article, the enhanced price may amount to a prohibition; and it may with truth be said, that there is not so large a sum of silver and gold circulating in the colony, as the duty imposed by the aforesaid act upon foreign molasses, would amount to in one year, which makes it absolutely impossible for the importers to pay it. . . .

There are upwards of thirty distil houses, (erected at a vast expense; the principal materials of which, are imported from Great Britain,) constantly employed in making rum from molasses. This distillery is the main hinge upon which the trade of the colony turns, and many hundreds of persons depend immediately upon it for a subsistence. These distil houses, for want of molasses, must be shut up, to the ruin of many families, and of our trade in general; particularly, of that to the coast of Africa, where the French will supply the natives with brandy, as they formerly did. Two-thirds of our vessels will become useless, and perish upon our hands; our mechanics, and those who depend upon the merchant for employment, must seek for subsistence elsewhere; and what must very sensibly affect the present and future naval power and commerce of Great Britain, a nursery of seamen, at this time consisting of twenty-two hundred, in this colony only, will be in a manner destroyed; and as an end will be put to our commerce, the merchants cannot import any more British manufactures, nor will the people be able to pay for those they have already received.[3] . . .

Jamaica is the only English island that now supplies us with molasses (excepting the new acquisition of the Grenades, which affords a small quantity of an inferior quality); and it can be proved by undoubted testimony, that even from thence our vessels have been frequently obliged to bring back money, because molasses was not to be had; and this has happened in the course of a few years, while the trade from the northern colonies to foreign plantations was at the highest.[4] . . .

Prominent among them for many years was Aaron Lopez, who came to Rhode Island in 1752 and remained there until the time of the Revolution, when he removed to Leicester, Mass. "He was a merchant of eminence, of polite and amiable manners. Hospitality and benevolence were his true characteristics, an ornament and a valuable pillar in the Jewish society of which he was a member. His knowledge in commerce was unbounded; and his integrity irreproachable. Thus he lived and thus he died; much regretted, esteemed and loved by all." E. 164. News Item relating to Slave Trade, 1764.[1]

Charleston, Oct. 5 [1764].

In June last, a sloop named the Adventure, Millar, master belonging to Rhode-Island or New-London, was trading at Sierra-leon, on the coast of Africa, and the master, with all the crew except one, being carried off by sickness, a gentleman who lived there sent two white men to assist in taking care of sloop and cargo, till a King's ship should arrive and claim them. While the sloop lay at anchor with her slaves, and these three men on board, the natives came off, hauled the vessel ashore, and barbarously murdered the white men and plundered the whole cargo except two slaves. The sloop was claimed by the factory at Bance Island,[2] and being delivered up to them was valued for the benefit of the owners and taken into service.

[7] "Newport, June 17. Capt. Owen Morris, who arrived here Yesterday from the Windward Coast of Africa, sailed from thence the 10th of April. A very great Mortality prevailed among the Shipping on the Coast; Capt. Morris was told, that Capt. Spear of Boston, and Capt. Hopkins of Providence, had lost near or quite all their Men, which reduced them to great Distress. Mr. Bennet, Capt. Heath's Mate, of this Place, also died on the Coast. And about 3 Weeks ago, Mr. Edward Belcher, Mate to Capt. Morris, likewise died" (Mass. Gaz. and News Letter, June 27, 1765, Supp.). That another Captain Morris from Rhode Island was trading in Africa is evident from a letter of Oct. 12, 1765, from Nicholas Brown and Company to Joseph Wanton: "we have Capt. Woodbury Morris's Receipt for 12 Boxes Sp'r Cand. wt. 2/8/4 which he Carried to Guinea on our Acct. Capt. Warner tells us that Capt. [2] Benjamin Mason had just reported to the Browns that near the beginning of March Hopkins, with forty slaves on board, had lost all his hands and had been obliged to send to the governor of Gambia for aid. He was at that time trading in Portuguese territory, where he was not allowed to land without the payment of exorbitant customs. It is difficult to reconcile this report with a letter written by the Browns to Capt. Abraham Whipple in July, in which they say that on May 17 Captain Hopkins wrote from the Gambia River that he had lost one man and three others sick (Kimball, Providence in Colonial Times, pp. 272-273). On Sept. 24 the owners wrote to a Mr. Relfe that they expected the brigantine to bring off about 140 slaves, for which they hoped to be in cash or bills by January. Hopkins actually lost a portion of his rum cargo from leakage, his mortality on the Middle Passage was heavy (post, no. 171), and he was obliged to sell for a low price in Antigua. Years later Moses Brown stated that this firm, as long as he was concerned in it, had lost rather than made money in the slave trade. Kimball, Note-Book, vol. II.

Nath'l Briggs, You being at present Master of our Sloop the Betsey wch is now ready loaded and fitted for the seas, our orders to you are, that you Embrace the first fair wind wch God Shall Send, and proceed with her to Sea and there make the best of your way to the Coast of Africa, When please God you arrive there, Endeavour to dispose of your Vessel and Cargo,[2] provided you Can obtain at Least One Thousand and one hundred Pounds Ster'g for Both, in Good Bills of Exchange, on England, in wch Case you are to remit (if any oppertunity directly from there to any part of England) the first and Second bills of Each Sett to William Stead Esqr. Merch't in London and advice him that Two Thirds thereof are on Acco't of Mr. Aaron Lopez and the Other one Third on Acct. of Mr. Jacob Rod. Rivera, and git the Bill Drawn Conformable thereto, and the Third Bills of Each Sett bring home with you; But if you Cannot Sell her for Bills, and you Can do it for Slaves to good advantage, and you have a prospect of Shipping Said Slaves on Freight to any port of the West Indias (to wch we would give Jamaica the prefferances,) or Should you on the Coast meat with Capt. Ab'm All in our Brig and he Can after he is Slaved Conveniently take any of those you may receive in pay for your Vessel and Cargo, you may put on board of them as many as you may Judge prudent, on our Acco't and we Shall write to Capt. All to that purpose, and as Several Circumstances may present that we Cannot now provide for, we Leave the whole of this Last Transaction to your Judicious Management as being upon the Spot you may be able to act for the most of our advantage. If you Cannot dispose of your Vessel and Cargo on Either of the foregoing Terms, then you are to dispose of her Cargo at any part of the Coast you may think most to our advantage, and as we have a very high Opinion of your Capacity and Experience in that Trade, we Leave the whole Management on the Coast to you, being persuaded you'll have the greatest regard to our Interest, and we beg it may be done in Such a manner as may Enable you to Quit the Coast as Soon as posible, and When you have finished your Trade on the Coast, proceed with your Vessel and Slaves and what

[2] On Nov. 11, 1765, Rivera wrote to Captain Briggs: "By a Late Intelligence from the Coast We are in hopes that you have not disposed there of yr Vessel as We had the pleasure to be informed times had alter'd greatly in favr of the Trade at Anamaboa therefore We flater ourselves with soon hearing of your safe arrival to Jamaica." other Effect you may have purchaced, with your Cargo, to Kingston in the Island of Jamaica and there deliver Whatever Slaves you may Carry in, on Acc't of the owners to Mr. Phillip Livingston Jun'r Merch't there, to whom we Shall give our Necessary orders for the disposal of them, and in whose hands we Shall Lodge for you whatever farther orders we may hereafter find Necessary, and we Shall give Mr. Livingston orders to account with you for your Coast Comm's wch is to be four out of Every one hundred and Four, or in the Like proportion from the Neet Sales of the Slaves at Jamaica that you may put in his hands on our Acct.; at Jamaica you are to follow Whatever orders we may Lodge there to Said Mr. Livingston and yourself, that is to Say respecting the dispatching of our Vessel back to this port. We would in the Strongest Manner recommend to you in Case you Sell the Vessel and Cargo, on the Coast for Bills of Exchange, that you take none but what Can be relyd upon as Good, and that the Drawers or Indorsers are good and responsible Men, and that you Leave us no outstanding Debts behind if posible, in your Way from the Coast to Jama. we would not have you put into any port in the West Indias if it Can be avoided; We have no need of recommending to you that in the persuit of your Voyages, you use the greatest dispatch, as Such a Small Vessel cannot Support any great Expen[ce] and that you are Watchfull of the Security of the Slaves; the Priviledge Slaves we have agreed to give in this Sloop is Four and one half to your Self and one and one half to your Chief mate, Mr. Will'm English, and no more, unless you Should purchace any thing with our Nephew Abraham Lopez's Venture for wch he has our Concent, we desier yould not Slip any oppertunity of advicing us with the State of your Affairs as well from the Coast as from any other port you may be at, Specially if you Should Sell your Vessel and Cargo for Slaves and Ship the Slaves in Either Capt. All or any other Vessel with the name of Vessel and Master and the port She is bound to in Case we Should think proper to Insure.

170. Aaron Lopez to Captain Abraham All, 1765.[1]

Newport July 22d 1765.

Capt. Abraham All, We hope you are before this Safe arrived on the Coast and that you may have found a favourable prospect of making a Quick and advantagious Voyage; Reflecting on the orders we gave you, find we Stated the price of Molasses at Jama. at 13 d. wch we find is higher then it will answer to bring it to this Market, we therefore refer you to What orders we Shall Lodge in the hands of Mr. Livingston at Jama. hereafter for that purpose. We have ordered Capt. Nath'l Brig in our Sloop, that in Case he Should dispose of his Vessel and Cargo for Slaves, and you Should not have disposed of our Brig to put on board of your Vessel as many Slaves as you Can Conveniently take unboard, over and above What you may purchase with your Cargo on our Acct. wch in that Case we desier youll take them on board and Deliver them to Said Mr. Livingston on our Acco't Seperate from those that may belong to your Cargoe, your wife is well.

171. News Items relating to Slave Trade, 1765.[1]

Capt. Henry Tilinghast from the Coast of Africa, but last from South Carolina, arrived here last Friday. He sailed from Annamaboa the first of May, and left there the Captains Thomas Wickham, Robert Stoddard, William Pinniger, John Coddington, and William Earle of this Port; Caleb Gardner, and Samuel James of Piscataqua, Capt. John Perry, from New York, arrived three Weeks before he sailed. Trade extreme dull upon the Coast.

By Letters from Capt. Hopkins in a Brig belonging to Providence arrived here from Antigua from the Coast of Africa we learn That soon after he left the Coast, the Number of his Men being reduced by Sickness, he was obliged to permit some of the Slaves to come upon Deck to assist the People: These Slaves contrived to release the others, and the whole rose upon the People, and endeavoured to get Possession of the Vessel; but was happily prevented by the Captain and his Men, who killed, wounded and forced overboard, Eighty of them, which obliged the rest to submit.

We hear that Capt. Rogers, of this Place, who lately arrived in the West-Indies from Africa, with a Number of Slaves, being bound from Barbados, to Antigua, the Blacks made an Attempt to overcome the Vessel's Company, but were subdued and twelve of them killed.

Newport 4th Feb. 1766.

Sir, . . . We beg you Wou'd favor us Without any loss of Time with your Acc't Curr't and the Ball'ce due to us including Interest and damages on the Protested Bills Returned you, it is Now upwards of two years and half Since First and largest Parcel of This Cargo of Slaves Was Consign'd you Which is, you are Sensible much too long to Remain u[n]settled and Unfinished more Especially Considering our haveing taken your Produce for So large a proportion of the Money. we beg you Woud not force us to write again for your Acct and the Ball'ce due.

174. William Stead to Aaron Lopez, 1766.[1]

London the 14th Feby 1766.

Sir, . . . niether do I hear any thing of the Spry Pinneger or the other Vessells You dispatch'd to the Coast of Africa.[2] . . .

I Observe you had a Letter from Capt Pinneger dated at the Coast the 11th July, that He wou'd proceed to Jamaica as soon as he had taken in his Wood and Water, as yet hear nothing of him. I observe your orders to procure Insurance on £1500 on the Brigg Africa Abraham All and £1200 the Sloop Bettsy Nat. Brigs, both at and from the Coast of Africa to Kingston in Jamaica all wch shall get done and advise you thereof but cannot by this Opportunity as have just rec'd your Letter, Observe that Mr. Jacob Rod. Riviera holds one third Concern in each of those Vessells, therefore as there are 2 Interests must be done on different policies. . . .

[173] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 214.

[174] [1] Lopez Letter-Book, no. 629, p. 2. The letter is repeated on p. 6. Stead had written in the preceding September that he had received no request for insurance on the Betsey and the Africa, and thought possibly Lopez had placed the insurance at home (Letter-Book, no. 622, p. 68). Between writing the first and second paragraphs of this letter he received a letter from Lopez.

[2] On June 20 Stead wrote: "I see with pleasure that the Spry, Pinneger, was arriv'd at Barbadoes and was to proceed to Jamaica; the Underwriters have made frequent Enquiry about Her, as they have now taken the Risque upon them near 2 Years" (Lopez Letter-Book, no. 629, pp. 15, 20). Captain Pinniger had died before this was written but the word had not yet reached London.

London the 7th March 1766.

Sir, . . . As yet hear nothing of the Guineamen, therefore expected before this You wou'd have Remitted Me some Bills. . . . at foot Hereof You have an account of what Insurance have done on your Guineaman wch was with great difficulty got any thing done as your order is given very loosely for You do not tell Me when your Ship was at the Coast or when to sail, niether at what Valuation to put the Negroes wch when put down in the Policy there is no occasion for a Proof of Interest wch occasions much delay, there are many Underwriters who will not write these Adventures, as they do not look upon them to be the most Eligible, therefore it is necessary you give as full an Explanation, as also how We are to Value the Cargoe on Board. You never can be too particular in giving your Description of the Quality of the Ships for it cannot be suppos'd Gentlemen will take upon them a Risque wch they can get no Information about, as also what time they are like to leave the Coast,[2] . . .

To Insurance on £1000 at 8 Guineas pr Ct in the Sally Capt N Briggs at and from Newport in Rhode Island to the Coast of Africa during her stay and Trade there and back to Barbadoes with Liberty to Proceed to any of the West India Islands	84

[176] [1] Kimball, Note-Book, vol. I. This was one of those rare periods in Rhode Island history when a Wanton was not governor. Joseph came to that office in 1769.

[2] In the earlier portion of this letter a question was asked about the making of Guinea casks in Providence. Nicholas Brown replied on June 28, offering to allow the Wantons to use the trade-book at any time, and stating that no Providence cooper would deliver Guinea hogsheads for less than £15, since to answer their purpose they must be made of the very "best stuff." Captain Hopkins's first mate was at sea, but the Browns were able to recommend his second mate heartily (ibid.). This correspondence presents an interesting picture of the relations between Newport and Providence, as well as between one commercial firm and another. The same month in which this letter was written Samuel Nightingale of Providence wrote to Lopez concerning the Guinea casks made by the Providence cooper Mr. Hacker. Lopez Letter-Book, no. 629, p. 18.

I Cannot Entertain the Least tho't but you used your greatest Influence to get the Premoio on the Easiest terms, but Permit me Sir to tell you the underwriters of your place give us no manner of Encouragemt to order our Insurance in Bristol, unless we Can have it done as low there as in London for when I inform you That Several Insurances were made in London at the Same time on Like voyages and Even on this Same Vessel and voyage at 8 per ct. that 10 Guineas at Bristol you will Certainly think the odds too great. Hope the Insurance on the Affrica Capt All has been done on more Moderate terms, wch am in daily Expectations to hear you have Effected.[2] . . . We have Lately reced Letters from Capt Briggs from the Coast of Africa advising his Safe arrival there, and Had begun to trade with tolerable success for the time he had been there wch gives me great reason to hope his stay on the Coast will not be great and that the Voyage if no Great Mortality may prove advantagious. . . .

[184] [1] N. Y. Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI. These items come from a badly torn trade-book of 1767 and from loose papers in the box. There is no reason to think they all relate to the trade of the same vessel.

[2] Similar items follow. On Aug. 20 there is another to "My Lord Augustus Fitzroy," possibly one of the native traders (ante, no. 140, n. 5). After several pages recording such trade as this there follows a list of provisions purchased, including fish, plantins, potatoes, limes, eggs, greens. There is also a careful list of other expenses on the West Coast, but no clue to the name of the vessel or the captain whose trade is recorded. The probability is that the vessel belonged to the Vernons, as the bulk of the papers in this box are Vernon papers.

185. ABRAHAM PEREIRA MENDES TO AARON LOPEZ, 1767.[1]

KINGSTON, 1st November, 1767.

Hon'd Sir, . . . I shipped on board Capt. Newdigate 2 prime Slaves, a Man and Wench, which costed me £72 for both. they are young Negroes and very able. . . .

I must now give you a Narrative of my Transactions with Capt. All. At my arrival in this place I heard of Capt. All being here, which gave me great Satisfaction, more so as I heard Negroes was in great demand. he paid me a visit the first day, but being very weak and obliged to receive company could not talk over matters. at the third day, I waited on Capt. All on board his Brig and to my great Surprise, I found the Negroes nothing to what I expected. However I laid down to Capt. All the consequence of his being detain'd, the great Expence his Negroes must be att, his portlage bill running up, and the Vessell receiving damage every day and the approaching Winter, and desired he would deliver the Negroes in my hands and would use all means to procure him 20 or 30 punch (eon)s Rum. He absolutely told me he could not answer the same as it was against his Orders. I made for answer that nothing but Mr. Lopez and Mr. Rivera's Interest which I have so much at Heart would have prompt(ed) me to purpose that Question. I dare say had he delivered the Negroes to me I could have sold them to good planters for a very good prise. All my means was not wanting in helping to dispose the Negroes but as his orders mentions Cash or Rum could not obtain it. I imagine he must att last yield to my proposition and you may rest yourself contented, that my utmost endeavours shall not be wanting, and hope very soon to give you good Tidings on this head. upon the whole I cannot totally blame Capt. All as his Instructions was so particular. . . .

[185] [1] Commerce of R. I., I. 209-210. Mendes, who had gone to Jamaica, probably from Newport, was Lopez's son-in-law. He went with power of attorney to receive some £600 due to Lopez from Philip Livingston for slave cargoes (Lopez Letter-Book, no. 81). His first letter, of Sept. 28, was written before he had seen Captain All's cargo, at which time he hoped to procure £25 stg. for the negroes. The next day he inspected the Africa, and as a result wrote a most discouraging account to Lopez. Commerce of R. I., I. 203, 205.

Newport Nov. 6th 1767.

Dear Mr. Abra Pera Mendes, . . . it also gives me no Small Pleasure to find you arrived in Season to Assist Capt. All, in the disposal of his Small Cargo, by what he had wrote us from Barbados and on his arrival at Jama we Expect he had brought off a parcel of Suitable Slaves for that Market, which am sorry to understand by you is Much to the Contrary, I am afraid by the sale of the 11 [2] he had made and the Mortality he had met with Since he arrived there, that his refusing the first offer he had will turn to our disadvantage, however hope that will be made up by your Assiduous Endeavour to promote our Interest wch am well Convinced you allways will have at heart: We approve Much your Resolution of sending her away soon with a Load of Rum and hope by Next week to See him safe arrived here. Capt. Briggs is not yet returned nor have we had any other News then to see by prints he was arrived at Antigua, wish to see him home [torn and illegible].

187. Abraham Pereira Mendes to Aaron Lopez, 1767.[1]

Kingston, November 29, 1767.

Dear Sir, The above was wrote 11 days agoe [2] was the time appointed for Cap'n All sailing, but his indisposition has caused his delay. The negroes which All deliverd me was in such poor order, occasioned by their being consignd on board his small Brig, that I was oblige to sell 8 boy and girls at £27, 2 do. at £45, 2 Women £35 each. I gott the Cash for the Boys; but the Vessell having poor

This captain was still in the Guinea trade in 1772, when news reached Boston by way of Philadelphia that his vessel and cargo were shipwrecked though he and his crew had escaped. *Mass. [11] On Sept. 20 the Vernons wrote to Messrs. Adams and Griffin of Virginia: "Recd. your Fav'r of 18th June advising the arrival of our Brig Othello, and of your having appointed the 29th of the same to begin the Sale soon after which Time we might expect to see the Brig at Newport.

"We also have your Favour of 31 July informing us of the Sale of 50 Slaves wch average about £39 Stg. and the rem'dr wou'd soon be disposed of, that you had purchasd a Load of Corn and hoped to dispatch her by the last of the next Week. As she is not yet Arrivd you may believe gives us some concern, as we cannot conceive the Reason of her being detaind. We make great dependance on your remitting us a considerable Sum in Octr. agreable to what you wrote us with a farther remittance in Decr. but flatter our Selves you will then be able to remit the whol." 190. Samuel and William Vernon to Alexander Brabner, 1768.[1]

Dear Sir, We Wrote you under Cover to Mr. Alex'r Hume at St. Kitts Respect'g our Brig Charlotte Wm. Taylor whom We Orderd to Stop at your Island from Africa to try your Markits; we the Last Evening heard the Unhappy News of his Death on the Passage, and that the Vessel was Arrived at your Island under the Care of his Mate Mr. Wm. Pinniger, this Is Oral News per Via St. Kitts and fear its but too True. as we Recommended Capt. Taylor to Make Application to you make No Doubt the Mate hath Done the Same and that the Whole Management of our affairs have Naturally fall'n into your hands which makes us Perfectly Easy. we Wrote to Mr. Alex'r Hume at St. Kitts Desiring him to Lodge a Letter with you for Capt. Tayler, and therein Make the Utmost Offer he wou'd Give for a Cargo of Slaves, which if he thought it worth his While to Proceed up to St. Kitts Rather than Sell at St. Croix Indeed if it was more for our Interest he was order'd to go up, if he hath been Kind Enough to make an offer, and you have Judged it for our Benefit make No Doubt but you have advised Mr. Pinnigar to Proceed up, Otherwise to Sell with you or Proceed to Jamaica as you Thought Best. We have heard the Dutys of Slaves with you is Near 20 PCt. Certainly it Cant be Expected it falls upon the Seller, that Sum out of £30 St'g will not Do which was Near about the Price we Limited at your Island. Neither Did we think it wou'd answer to take Produce as the Sugars are too high and Ordinary for our Markits, Dutys being 5/ St'g P. C. Rum Prohibited and the Risque therefore Very Great more than Equal to the Advantage which almost Confindd Capt. Tayler to Sell for Bills Ex'a Only however if Either you or Mr. Pinnegar, hath Sold for part Produce we must Intreat of you to Take but few Sugars and those Very Good, and fill the Vessel up with Rum on which Subject we have fully wrote the Capt. and Pray be Carefull that he Observes his directions which he will Communicate to you.

If this young Man Mr. Pinnegar has been so indiscreet as to Take the sole and Intire disposition of his Cargo and Affairs, we Beg and Intreat Sir upon the Rec't of this youd Just do for us, as the Affair was your own, not Doubting of your Candour we Submit Everything to your Better Judgment.

We only Beg Leave to Mention That the 2nd Mate Mr. Edward Taylor is Son to yr Old Fr'd T. T. Taylor your Best Advice to him will Be Acceptable, we wis[h] you mor Perfect helth Than our above Friend who is Now Confined with the Gout.

191. William Vernon and Company to William Pinniger, 1768.[1]

Newport 10th Feby. 1768.

Sir, Last Evening we heard the Malancholy News of Cap Wm. Taylors Death by way of St. Christopher. We make No Doubt but that he had Rec'd our Orders upon the Coast, to stop at St. Croix and try the Markets and that you have Rec'd our Letters which we Lodged there for him in the hands of Mr. Alex'r Brabnor and also a Letter from Mr. Alex'r Humes from St. Kitts, to whom We Wrote desireing him to Lodge for Capt. Taylor at St. Croix, to Care of Mr. Brabner, Saying What he Wou'd Give for his Cargo of Slaves, if he wou'd Proceed Up to St. Kitts, which offer we Expected woud be Near £30 St'g per head, by this Meens Capt. Tayler woud be Informd at which of Those Places it wou'd be most Advantagious to Sell at. We Flatter ourselves that you have Rec'd all Those Letters directed to Capt. Tayler, and Made the Best Advantage of Them For our Interest and your own Reputation, we further Wrote Mr. Brabner Requesting him to Assist Capt. Tayler in All Things Respecting his Sale or Proceeding further which he was to do if the Markits did not Suit him vizt. To Jamaica Stopping at the Mount in his Way Down, where Perhaps he might get about £30 St'g per hea[d]. We are Rather Inclined to think that you have Contracted for your Slaves at St. Croix, and must Naturally Conclude you have Put yr Business into the hands of Mr. Brabner our Friend, in which we Shall be best Satisfyed, and that yr Slaves

ar sold free from Dutys to the Seller, as we are Informd the Dutys are 20 PCt. which you well Know will by No Means do upon a Sale of £28 or £30 St'g. We further have Said in Our Letter to Capt Tayler that it wou'd not do to Sell for Produce As the Dutys of Sugar is Very high,[2] and an Utter Prohibition On Rum in Any of the English Colonys. however if your Slaves are Sold for Produce its best to fill your Lower hold with Rum Take a few Cask of Very good Sugars, (as Ordinary will not Sell) in your hatch way and Proceed here, go in the Backside of the Island at Either End and Give us Intelligence there of as soon and Privately as Possible, if you Meet with any Man of Warr or Cutters as there is two In this Port at Present, you must say you Put in in Distress, for Want of Provisions, Water or Some thing Absolutely Necessary, and that you are bound to Fyal one of the Western Islands, for Which Place your Invoices and Bills Lading must Absolutely be made out for and your People Shipt to Proceed there, for which Purpose we have Given you Orders to Proceed There, and Inclosed herewith which you are to Produce and Insist upon if Met with, concealing Every Paper, that may give the Least Intimation of your Stopping here, these Measures if you Take Rum on Board you are Strictly to Observe. we shall send a Small Vessel from hence in a few Days to St. Croix that will want about 40 hhds. Rum, if you meet with her she may be supply'd out of your Cargo. we Cannot be More Particular than Above, but Must Trust to your Discretion, Fidelity and Candour, Advising and Consulting in Every thing with our good Friend Mr. Alex'r Brabner, making all Possible dispatch, be frugal of yr Expences on the Vessel, Preserve harmony and Agreement among Your Seamen.

Newport 10th Feby. 1768.

Sir, You are become Master of our Brig Royal Charlotte by the Death of Capt Wm. Taylor and hearing that you've Sold yr Cargo of Slaves at St. Croix, for which if you are to Take Produce you are Sensible it will not answer to Bring Sugars the Dutys are so very high, Neither Can you Bring Rum as there is an Utter Prohibition thereof in Any of the Colonys.

We Order you therefore to Load your Vessel in the Lower hold with Rum and Proceed to Fyal one of the Western Islands, where

[2] By the Sugar Act of 1764 the duty on sugar was raised to £1 7 s. per hundred weight. It will be seen by ante, no. 179, that Pinniger had not dealt with Alexander Brabner but with Cornelius Durant.

[192] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 140. The preceding letter, inscribed to Mr. Pinniger, was intended for his eyes alone; this one, addressed to Captain Pinniger, was for whatever cutters were encountered on the voyage home.

we have Lodged a Letter for you, its our Intentions that you there Ex'a Your Rum for Wines, and Either Bring them here or Proceed to Wind Ward Island with them, as you will Find by our Farthere Instructions at Fyal, make all Possible dispatch as the Markets Depend upon a few Months Only, we wish you a good Voyage and Safe Return and are your Friends and Owners Newport at this time was said to have twenty-two distilleries (Field, State of Rhode Island, II. 400-402) and was called upon to supply rum to vessels from distant ports. On June 28, 1768, James Lucena of Savannah, Ga., wrote to Aaron Lopez that Capt. Nathaniel Waldron was about to come from Georgia to Rhode Island with molasses, sell this, and buy rum for an African voyage. Commerce of R. I., I. 242.

Sir, In consequence of the application of Mr. Robert Sorsbie to us for that purpose, we hereby engage that any Agreement that Messrs. Lovell Morson and Co. of Dominica may come to with any person, for Negroes consigned to them for sale by Messrs James Clark and Co., shall be punctually performed; and we hereby undertake also to accept and pay any and all Bills they may draw on us in pursuance of such Consignments, in all cases but that of the Island wherein such sale shall be made, or they reside, being invaded by an Enemy.

We are respectfully, Sir, Your Most Humble Servants,

Kender, Mason and Co.

Messrs. Lovell and Morson sell as well to the French and Spaniards, for whom they have large orders to execute, as to our Planters of B.Bs.[2] Antigua and Dominica; so that under these circumstances, Dominica seems to bid fairer to render you advantageous sales, than any other Island.

London, 29th Aug., 1770.

We agree that the withinmentioned Guaranty shall subsist not only for such Negroes as may be consigned Messrs. Lovell Morson and Co. by Messrs. James Clark and Co., but also for such Negroes as may be consigned to them by Messrs. Butler and Brown or Robert Brown Esqr.

Sir, . . . we recd. a Line from our Capt. a few days past upon the Coast of Affrica, Times are dull, which will delay him a great while upon the Coast, our Orders are that if he gets off Coast so as to be at Virginia before the beginning of April, to Stop at some of the Windward Islands and recruit his Slaves, with fresh Provisions and even to lay Six or Eight Weeks rather then to attempt your Coast too soon and we were in hopes you wou'd keep us advised frequently of the State of your Markets.[2] . . .

[2] Trade was not flourishing on the African coast in 1770 and the material for that year is meagre, yet some Rhode Island vessels were trading or preparing to trade. Hayley and Hopkins insured the Cleopatra, Briggs; Captain All arrived in Philadelphia from an African voyage; and news came from Capt. Silas Cook of the death of Mr. Haywood Smith on the coast (Lopez Letter-Book, no. 631, pp. 26, 48; Mass. Gaz. and News Letter, Jan. 11, and Dec. 7, 1770). The Wetmore Papers and those in the Shepley Library (Providence) contain lists of stores for the sloop Adventure, bound for Africa under Capt. Thomas Rogers, now in the service of the Champlins. They heard on Feb. 16, 1771, by way of Messrs. Stevenson and Went, that on Nov. 28 Captain Rogers was trading at Anamabo. N. Y. Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI.

hearty thanks. Captain Briggs in the Cleopatra,[2] (quite unexpected so early) arrived here the 11th Currt. with a Cargo of 96 Slaves; as soon as his Vessell was safely anchor'd he waited on us, and informed us his intention was to value himself on us, and that we had the preference to dispose of his cargo provided we wou'd take him up, upon as good terms as any other good and safe house here would; and in consequence thereof, and from the advice of our good friend Mr. Stocker, we went off and viewed his slaves, which appear'd healthy, but rather a great proportion of privelege [3] and male slaves; we however made Capt Briggs the offer of taking him up, to make the most we cou'd of his Cargo, and to sell his privelege free of Commission, but for such to take the Bills we might receive in payment without our guaranteeing them, this he objected to, tho seem'd desirous we shou'd sell him and thus circumstanced one or two days past, after which we recommended to him to try what Messrs. Jones and Moe wou'd do, and we make no doubt their terms were more agreeable, so he struck with them, tho' those gentn behaved very politely, and were tender of having anything to do with the Cargo untill we told Capn Briggs he had best try them, and that for the last Cargo of Slaves we sold, we had Bills to a considerable amount protested, that were taken in payment; and we assure you Gentn. we never knew so many bills protested in one year as was the last, that we think there is the greatest risk in trade we ever knew. We are truly sorry we could not in this second attempt commence a Correspondence with you, but are hopefull times will mend and a future day establish a lasting connexion between us. Capt. Briggs has no doubt wrote you [as] well as Messrs Jones and Moe.

P. S. We deliver'd your Letter to Capt. Briggs immediately on receipt of it.[4]

[2] For this voyage the Cleopatra was insured for £1500, at a cost of £133 15*s* 3*d*. (Hayley and Hopkins to Lopez, July 24, 1770, Letter-Book, no. 631, p. 26). "NEW PORT, March 11. The Captains Pease and Harrison arrived here last Week, from Barbadoes, and advise, that the Captains Clark, Briggs, and English, all of this Port, were arrived at Barbadoes, from the Coast of Africa; by all Accounts from the Coast, the Trade there was extremely dull, several Vessels having sold their Cargoes on 6 and 12 Months Credit, and then to take a Slave for 190 Gallons of Rum; while others were obliged to leave their Cargoes consigned to the Factors there, and run the Risk [of] getting Something or Nothing for them." *Mass. 199. Samuel and William Vernon to Captain John Duncan, 1771.[1]

Newport 8 Ap'l 1771.

Sir, We recd. yours of 13 Ulto. from Barbados, and find that you had purchased 71 Slaves for Cargo and Bro't them all in, being in perfect Health and Shou'd Sail in 10 or 12 days for Virginia, as you well remark if cou'd possably be there between the Months of March and Septr. it was our Possitive orders that you proceed to Virginia and therefore if you cou'd obtain our Limitt of £30 Stg. Round, it was not in your power to Sell at Barbados in which you was certainly right; therefore upon your Arrival at Rappahannock you'l address yourself to Col. Jno. Thornton to Whom we have Wrote on the Subject and desired him to dispatch your Vessel as Soon as Possible with about 150 bbs. of good fresh Flour and 2 or 3 Tons of good Hemp and fill her up with White Oak Staves and heading if to be had readily or you may even take 200 bbs. Flour if Cheap not to exceed 12 pr Ct. if you think it is absolutely necessary to tarry untill all your Slaves are Sold and your Vessel can be dispatch'd sometime Sooner its best to Send yr Cheif Mate Home with her, if you do not Load your Vessel bring as many of your Water Casts [casks] home as you can Stow, better than leaving them behind, without you can Sell them there.

If you have more hands than is necessary and can discharge them upon good Terms its best to do it and avoid all expences upon your Vessel that you can, we have Recommend to Col. Thornton to Sell part of your Slaves upon Credit provided it will make a material diff'ce in the Price of them taking care to have good Security and not a long Cr.[2] . . .

200. Threlfal and Anderson to Christopher and George Champlin, 1771.[1]

Grenada April 22nd 1771.

Gentlemen, Agreeable to promise of our R:T: when at Newport, we embrace this first Opportunity, (after his arrival here) of advising you of the State of our Markett for Slaves, which we are sorry to say is not quite so good as it has been or might reasonably be expected from the small number that has been sold lately, out of seventeen Cargoes, say abt 3750 Slaves, that came in full expectation of selling at this Market in the space of 5 Months last past, only six Cargoes say abo't 1320 Slaves, has been sold, all the rest gone to Jamaica or Carolina but believe mostly to the former place, those that sold here all averag'd a tolerable good price, say from £35 to £37, Slaves being still in demand, but the disappointments the Factors have met with from having the Planters Bills proteste[d] makes us cautious of drawing on our Correspondents besides having reduced many of them to the greatest difficulties and of course not in a Capacity to purchase Slaves, yet we can still with propriety say that this is the best Market of any of the windward Islands, and we are in great hopes we shall be able to keep up the Price of Gold Coast Slaves, especially when they come in small Cargo's. two days ago arriv'd here Mr. Mason's Brig Polly, Capt. Elliott with Ninety odd Slaves including Priviledge of which we have agreed to sell, altho' we have lately refus'd at least a dozen Cargo's that was offer'd us on any terms, being determined to strain every Nerve for the Interest and good Opinion of our Newport Friends.

[199] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, p. 203. Addressed "To Capt. Jno. Duncan, Virginia," who was one of the signers of a protest against the administration of the African Committee. Captains Silas Cook, Charles Moore, and Thomas Rogers of Rhode Island also signed this protest. See this work, II. 543 n.

[2] On the same day the Vernons wrote to Col. John Thornton of Fredericksburg, Va.: "We hear Virginia slaves sell for £45. We recommend our Friend Richard Brew Esq. at Annamaboe to your House who perhaps ships more slaves than any one man in the Kingdom." He added that Capt. John Duncan, then in Barbados, had 71 slaves on account of the Vernons and 19 on his own account. Letter-Book, no. 77.

Capt. Elliott tells us your Sloop arriv'd at Annamaboe about the first of February, had sold before Capt. Elliott left the Coast the 8th Febry and was gone down Widan to land his Rum, from which account we presum he will be in the West Indies sooner than you imagind. Capt. Elliotts Slaves are good we expect to turn them out abt £38, when any alteration in our Markett, (which we hope will be for the better) you may depend on being advised.

We sell Mr. Morson's Slaves on the same terms we sold Mr. Hazards say Bills at a Medium of 12 Months, and Shorter it will be impossible for us to give them this Year. If your Sloop calls on us you may depend on our acting in every respect as if the Cargo was our own, will lodge letters at Barbadoes for your Captain which may be some government to him if he calls there, will write you again pr Capt. Elliott who leaves this in about a fortnight, he tells us Slaves are very high on the Coast.

Sirs, . . . please to make Insurance on one half the Schooner Active[2] £150 and on Cargo £300, Robt. Elliot Master from hence [201] [1] Vernon Letter-Book, no. 77, pp. 207-208. For an account of the formation of the partnership of Hayley and Hopkins see Commerce of R. I., I. 251-253. Hayley married the sister of John Wilkes, who after her husband's death is said to have purchased the frigate Delaware, taken from the Americans, and come to this country to collect his debts in Boston and Newport. She landed in Boston in the summer of 1784, and remained long enough to marry an American suitor, but soon after her marriage returned to England. R. I. Hist. Mag., V. 71.

[2] A small trading-book of the Active is to be found in the New York Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI. This relates to a voyage of 1769, in which year the vessel traded to the Coast of Affrica, dueing her Trade there, and to Market with her Slaves wch may be at the Windward Islands, or to the Continent of North America—its the Same Schooner of Dordins wch Mr. Benja. Mason and our Selves have bot. She is a good one and well fitted for such a Voyage an old experienced Master, we Shou'd chuse to have provision made in the Policy for a return of Premium if Sold on the Coast, as we have given the Capt Orders to Sell her at Seregal [Senegal]—Serelion we chuse where. . . .

first for the Cleopartra's, We have made £2150 on her for Your Acco't: the Cost of wch: being £144:7:3 as per particulars herewith is to Your Debit; This is Exactly Conformable to the orders rec't from Mr. Rivera. The return of p'mo on her last Voyage we have not been able to gett settled, Mr. Rivera has sent us an Accot of what She left behind on the Coast, but this is not what the underwriters will be satisfied wth; they think it not improbable that if she had Carried the whole of the Effects they would have amounted to more than the Sum wch was Insur'd and therefore they require an attested Invoice of what she had on board and whatever that amounts to less than the Sum Insured they will return the p'mo upon, wch Invoice You'll please forward us. We would just lay it before You for Your Consideration whether in your future Affrican Insurances it would not be better if the Slaves were valued in the Policy at some rate per Head; it would in case of Loss be of some use of facilitating wth the Insurers. the Alteration in the Charlotte's Ins'ce is done at the additional P'mo of 1 gn: Per Cent wch: is lower than we Expected when we last Mentioned it to You. We Debit You for this Alteration £12:12. . . .

five hundred and Ten Pounds, Stg. the 9 ulto. for wch we are obledg'd. We are now to remark on our Account Curr't Transmitted to us. The Charges of Stanton, Fairbanks, W W. Vernon and S and W. Vernon In'rs.[?] are right, but we think that of Capt. Duncan is not, as we wrote you and Capt Duncan of the 8th Ap'l that we expected his Slaves to be averidged with Two Thirds of the Cargo, (or at least one half,) and its being a general Custom, his agreeing thereto when you made the proposal, as by yours of the 1st May, we think the adjustment of the averidge on the first 28 grown Slaves to be wrong; Please to Settle his Eight Slaves on the first half (being the least part proposed to him) and we are content, we Say Eight, as their appears to be a Small Boy of his Sold for £30, but if a proportion of our Boys are taken into the Averidge we also are content with, wch we Submit to you to adjust. . . .

Please to remitt to us, W W. Vernon's and S. and W Vernon In'rs Ballance in a good Bill of Exchange.

204. John Fletcher to Captain Peleg Clarke, 1771.[1]

London 16th Octo'r 1771.

Sir, I Wrote the 7th June Accquainting You of My Safe Arrival in England; since Which I received Your Favr of the 12 June, and Observe what you menthion about the Times on the Coast of Guina, Which I find Continues still bad, Yet several of Your Merchants have fitted out again this Summer. I had likewise a letter of the 29 July from Mr. Malbone who enfirms What you wrote and gives but poor encouragement about sending to Gunia At present, as by the last Acco'ts they was giving from 200 to 220 Gallons Of Rum for but indifferent Slaves so there is but little prospect of doing Any thing on the Coast till next Summer.

Mr. John Peatt came up with me from Hull afew days ago and since We have been in London We have taken some pains to get a Vessel to send You out as I proposed, but cou'd not meet with any thing for sale to Suit Our Purpose. What are sent Home for sale from New England, are not found and at presant are both scarce and Dear, therfore We have declinerd purchasing one here. And at this time of the year no Freight to be had for your port so that had we met with a Vessel it never wou'd have Answered at any rate to have sent her out in ballast as the Out fits And Port Charges are very high from hence.

[204] [1] Newport Hist. Soc., Peleg Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75 A. There are two letter-books of Captain Clarke, covering the years 1771-1782. He and his London principal, John Fletcher, who had himself spent some time in Newport, were both given to long and frequent letters, in which they reported to each other many details of their trade. They had been considering a joint African venture since the beginning of June, 1771.

Mr. Peatt and self have now come to this resolution to leave it to you to Purchace a proper Vessel either at Rhode Island or Providence, Boston Or the Eastward or any where in your Neighbourhood, Viz. A good Brig or Snow from 110 to 130 Tons Burthen but not to exceed the Latter, to Get her Sound and as well found as possible, and not above 3 or 4 years old, Mr. Peatt recommends you pay regard to a long floor, easy Draught Water, and Clean Run as likely to Sail Well which is very Meterial for a Gunia Man and We suppose such a Vessel well found with two Suits of sails may be purchaced from £400 to £500 Sterling at most, as we wou'd not have you go much higher than that. I suppose the most likely place to get a Vessel at will be Boston, Salem or Nebury, as the winter is coming on may be met with there Cheap, but this I leave to your Self. If you can meet with one at Rhode Island desire you will take Mr. Fran's Malbone's Advice in that matter, Who I have wrote to by this Oppertunity, to give you his Assistance as well as to indorse Your Bills on Me for the Purchase of the Vessel. But if you are oblig'd to go to Boston, or the Eastward you must Apply to Mr. Ralph Hinman [2] of Boston on that Account, as I have likewise Wrote him a Letter on the Occasion by this Oppertunity to serve in Case of Need. You will have time enough to look about you for this Vessel between this Time and March next as it will be a good time to fit out in all the month of April and to sail for the Coast by the begining of May, which from the present Appearance of things will be early enough to follow those already gone to the Coast. I am willing to make this further trial to Gunia on yours as well as Messr. Peatts Aco't who at any rate must both be benifited by the Voyage. For my Own part I have no grat Expectation of Profits, If you are Succesful and lose but few Slaves may make a saving Voyage and do well for the Conserned. I need not hint to you if you purchace the fewor if but good Slaves they will always Command a price at Kingstown, and M'rs Peatts and Westmorland will have the most of them engag'd long before you get there to Good Men. As soon as you have Purchased this Vessel you will get Mess's Malbone to be purchasing about 15,000 gallons of Rum to be ready at the time I have mentioned or Sooner. if you have any Encouragement to do any Thing at Windward, the above Quant'y of Rum We think full enough for you to get off those dull times as laying long on the Coast is what ruins every thing in small Vessels.

If you Purchace a Vessel at Boston or Eastward wou'd have you get her Insured round to Newport as there is some risque to come Cape Cod and so forth in the Winter. If you are not Acquainted with the Coast you will no doubt get some person with you that is. Also Write me as soon as you have a prospect of geting a Vessel as Above and any other late Acc'ts from the Coast. My Ship Affrica Arrived at Hull the 26th July after 8 weeks passage from Jamaica, and made a pretty good Freight, and finding She wou'd want A great repair her Sheathing Rotten and Rudder bad thought it best to get quit of her and accordingly sold her for £370 Sterling Which was the most She wou'd fetch. Capt. Stocford [3] was very Sickly and not able to come upon Deck most of the passage but is now hearty and as well as ever again, is still in London and says he is in some hopes of geting a Vessel if not returns home soon. It was very lucky that Mr. Peatt came Passenger in my Vessel as he was oblig'd to take the charge of her most of the voyage on Aco't of Stockfordes Illness also being better acquainted with the English Channel.

Your Bill on Mess's Allen Marlas and Co. for £400 Sterling will be Due next Month, and when paid will advise you. I suppose you will Want abt £150 Sterling more to make up your Third share of this proposed Vessel and Cargo etc. which no Doubt you'l be able to make you Up in Rum etc. amongst your Friends at Newport, as it will be best for You to hold a third as first proposed. But if not you must take Only A Quarter part and Mr. Peatt and self must hold the rest. But this I leave to your self as it may suit you, Mr. Malbone and you must fix that. I have purchased a Guinea Furnace and Hearth here, which shall be sent you by the first Vessel for Rhode Island which I suppose will be Capt. Gilbert. The Swivel Guns, Chains, Hand Cuffs and Sheckles etc. at Mr. Malbones must be valued when Delivered you, and shall send a Box of Midicenes from this with a Barrel of Gun Powder, some Beans etc. so that nothing of that sort will be wanted to be purchased at Newport. . . .

When he left Annamaboe there was only Capt. Hicks and Capt. Hanners and they were almost Slaved off and was a giving to the Gent'n of the Castles One Hundred and Sixty Gallons. I wrote you last by way of Boston, when I then made you Accquainted with what Vessels where a going and gone and I now further Inform you who are a going and will Sail soon, Capt. More, Capt. Rogers, Capt. Bordine from this port, from Boston a Snow belonging to So. Carolina. Mr. Hazzard and Capt. Champlain's Vessels Are lying by till next Spring, the above are all that I know or hear talked of are fitting out for Gunia. I should be excessive Glad to hear from you to know wether or not you had carried your plan into Execution which I do not doubt but you have for I assure you being out of Buisness so long makes me like A Fish out of Water, However I doubt not but in good time. I must beg that whatever Interest You send out, my part of the Vessel of Mine you will Insure, for Our Winter is set in very Cold, and it is a bad Season to come on the Coast. I saw Mr. Malbone yesterday and asked him if he would Write to you, and he said he could not tell you any more than he had Said before he heard from you. . . .

206. Samuel and William Vernon to Adams and Griffin, 1771.[1]

Newport 16th Decr. 1771.

Sirs, We have now before us your two last fav'rs viz. 8 Feb'ry and 3d April, since wch we are intirely deprived of a single line from you. We are really at a loss to suggest a sufficient reason; but imagine you have taken umbrage at our adressing the Brigg't Othello Jno. Duncan to Mr. John Thornton at Rappahannock, its very true by our Letters you might reasonably expect her to your adress; but we had the greatest encouragement imaginable from the above Gentle'n of his making the Remittance in the bottom for the whole amount of the Cargo of Slaves, and the prospect appearing equally good to us of obtaining great prizes[prices] were strong motives to us, of Ordering her to Rappahannock, wch we had only just Time to countermand our Order, to the Master. When Gentle'n you reflect upon the remittance made us for the Two Cargos of Slaves that you sold you cannot but suppose we wou'd close with such an offer, as the difference of the advantage of having so large a sum to improve and of its laying dead for several years is very great and besides our being so vastly disappointed in your promise made us in Feb'ry of depending upon our Ballance, at the Riseing of your Genl. Court viz in April, and then say no Time shall be lost in making the most speedy remittance for your Ballance. To pass by every thing that has happened, without one more complaint, we must say in justice to your House that your sales have ever been satisfactory to us, as any we have received, and can truely wish your closeing this Acct. may be a meins of soon opening another.

London 24th February 1772.

Sir, . . . I cant say more than what I have before About Purchasing a Vessel, which have no doubt but you have Accomplished or[ere] this and is geting ready for the Voyage and if you can get your Cargo of Rum and every thing on Board to sail from Newport about the last of may to get on the Coast by the Time the Rainy Season is Over will be early enough to follow all those Vessels that gone before, and in Case you should think propper to call at windward as you go down to get afew Slaves before you come to Anamaboe shall leave that to your self to do as seems best. As your Cargo will be but small you'l the sooner get it off and if you can get Slaved in time to get down to Jamiaca in all the month of Jany. Will be a good Time for Sale of Slaves, of which I know you will be as particular in the Choise of as the Times will admit of. Good Slaves always sells high at Jamaica, they now Avarage £40 Ster'g pr head there at Least in Bills or Cash.

When you are ready to Sail from Newport Write Mess's Peatts and Westmorland of Kingston Jamiaca as also by every Oppertunity from the Coast that they may know when to expect you to be prepared accordingly, As I make no doubt of their engageing all the Cargo by Orders amongst their Friends in the Country long before you get there. I desire you may write Me as soon as you have got the Vessel ready and made a begining to take in your Cargo of Rum, by Boston or Newyork that I may get the Insurance made here on Vessel and Cargo from Newport to the Coast Guinea and Anchord to Jamaica and your part of the Consern I shall get done with my own. You will take a sufficciant Quantity of Rice from Rhode Island to serve the Voyage and not depend on getting it on the Coast as before, the fatal Consequence of that Disappointment We have experienced, also get some black Ey'd pease which may be had from Philidilphia or New york. On the other side I have given an Estimate of what provissions etc. I wou'd have you take, But as Mr. Malbone and you are better Judges than I of what is Nessary to [207] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75 A.

Serve the Voyage may add or Deminish as you shall think best. I have now shipped by the Tristram Capt. Shand to Mess. Malbones Care a new Cable with 6 Coils of Cordage of Different Sizes which Mr. Peatt and self Judged wou'd in Course be wanted for the Vessel you may purchase, as those for Sale are seldom well found, I have also sent a Liverpool Guine Furnace with Hearth etc. with a Box Medicenes which was put up by order of a Doctor here, a Friend of Mine who has given a Little Directions (here inclosed) how to treat Negroes in the Flux, If you should ever be so Unluckey as to have it again Which I hope not and you know how to Use the Difft Medecines and Dressings the same as Doct'r Hunter Charged. I think you have some left in the Old Box which if good may be put Altogether, you'l Observe the Charge of those sent, does not Amount to a Third of what Doct'r Hunter Charged. . . .

Estimate of the provisions for Guinea Voyage
16 bls. Beef, 10 Do. Pork, 15 Ct. Weight Bread
2 Tons Rice at least. 1 hhd. Black Ey'd pease. 1 hd. Tobacco

Other Nessaries for Ditto
1 New long Boat, 20 bls. Flour and Naval Stores if you call at Windward, under the Care of Mess's E and F Malbones to be Valued and Charged the Owners

Bost } 6 Swivel Guns
} 150 hand Cuffs and Shackles, Chain etc. 12 d. Plank, O. T. Arm Chest. rs
6 Guns and 2 Cutlashes, 1 Corn Mill
Some Coopers Tools

P.S. I shall not send any powder, you can get a little at Newport as its not worth while to send so small a quantity from here now nor Beans you must get Black Ey'd peas in room of them.

208. Captain Peleg Clarke to Ralph Inman, 1772.[1]

Newport 29th April 1772.

S'r, Your Fav'r per Post I recd. Acknowledge my Neglect of not writing before, I intended as soon as I hd. Purchased a Vessel but since that time I have let the post slip throu'h hurry of buisness. I have shew'd your Letter to Mr. Malbone and he has given Mr. Fletcher Cr. for the £1.8.8 and now send you the Ball'e by Mr.

[208] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75 A. Inman had written to Clarke on Jan. 13 offering his assistance in finding a satisfactory vessel. Clarke replied on Jan. 16, and on the 27th Inman wrote recommending the Bristol, Boston-built, belonging to John Hancock, which could be had for £700. Clarke evidently went to Boston to see this vessel but nothing came of the negotiations. Ibid.

mumphord which is £2.7.4 L M.[2] and am much oblig'd to you for your favour. After several Tryals of Purchasing a Vessel since my return from Boston, I at last have taken an old Vessel of Mr. Malbones that was rebuilt about 2 years ago.[3] She will carry the Cargo that Mr. Fletcher Ordered and is a good Sailor and is well found and will answer for the Voyage, But I am very Sure Mr. Fletcher cou'd have Suited himself and me much better in London or I cou'd have had I not been Limitted. I gave Mr. Malbone £450 St'g for her and I expect it will cost £50 St'g more to fix her for a Guinea Voyage, as I am Oblig'd to make some Alterations in her, Mr. Fletcher very well knows her as she was rebuilding when he was here. I heare there are Several Guinea man fitting out of Boston, I shall take it a favour you'l let me know by the next post if it is so and in what forwardness they are. I write this day to Mr. Fletcher by way of Liverpool and if any Oppertunity presents from Boston and you write him I beg you will Acquaint him that I expect to Sail in a fortnight for the Coast, and shall transmit all the Acco'ts by Capt. Shand who will Sail in about three weeks. . . .

Boston 11th May '72.

Sir. . . . Thos. Boylston has one Vessel bound to Guinea. She don't begin to load till the beginning of June and will take at least a month after that to get away. He has made a purchase this week of a Brig for Mr. Carty[2] about 180 Tons, he gave £1000 Stg. for her and going to make her into a Ship. She will not get to Sea as soon as the other, So you will have Six Weeks start. I hear there's one going from Newberry but cannot Learn what forwardness she is in. . . .

210. Christopher and George Champlin to Captain Samuel Tuell, 1772.[1]

Newport, May 12th, 1772.

Sir, We flatter our selves this will meet you in safety upon the Coast in a fair way of making us a Voyage, as from the accounts

[210] [1] Commerce of R. I., I. 398-399. Captain Tuell's vessel was the sloop Adventure, insured by Hayley and Hopkins for £1400, at a premium of £125 2 s. 6 d. The terms of the insurance were "at and from Newport to the coast of Africa, during her stay and trade there, and from thence to her port of discharge in British America or the Island

up to January, and the price Capt. Gardner in Mr. Wickhams Ship obtained for his rum Slaves was much lowered, At the Castles with whom he traded. Colo. Wanton's Brig, Mowit Master, is arived here, cleared his owners £500 Stg. Capt. Brigs carried to Barbados 230 Slaves sold 210 of them at £33 Stg. round, left 40 on the Coast will make a good voyage. We don't doubt of your giting the same price if the Slaves are good in kind which without doubt you will endeavour to procure. Capt. Clark will deliver you this. Capt. Hicks in the Ship will not sale till June.[2] Mr. Hazards brig not till August. these are the only vessells we kno of that can follow you from Newport and before they git down flatter our selves you will be near finishing. Lin Martin is gone to Philadelphia to fit, cannot sale from thence 'till July. We have wrote to London for a Guarantee on a House at the Granados and St. Kitts,[3] from both which places we shall be informed the price of Slaves before we lodge our orders at Barbados for you which will enable us to limit the price at Barbados. you'll write us by all occassions. keep your Business to your self. there is two vessells will leave Boston in (a) month for the Coast, that in June and July 3 or 4 vessells will sale near together.[4] Capt. Gardner informs his owners after laying two months on the Coast alone he could not make any trade with the blacks, and finally sold to the Castles at 130 to 150 for women and 140 to 160 for prime men. Is likely to make a fine voyage. therefore we earnestly recomend to you as soon as you receive this to sell all the rum you may have on hand to the Castles on the best terms you can for prime Slaves, and make all dispatch of, for when those vessells I mention to you git down the Castles will be filled, which will be within a month after this letter or 6 weeks at most, and shoud you tarry 'till they git down the chaunce will be lost. in this you'll act as things appear as we cannot judge how the trade is at this distance, of St. Croix. If the vessel is sold on the coast, the risk on cargo to be continued on such other vessel or vessels as may carry the slaves to market, and 4 per cent. in that case to be returned on the £400 insured on vessels and freight." The sums were £400 on vessel and "freight valud" and £1000 on cargo; the rate "eight guineas per cent." (Com. of R. I., I. 397). The expenses incident to the outfit of this voyage of the Adventure are to be found in detail in the Wetmore Papers (vol. V.), along with the advances to the seamen and the sources of the cargo of rum carried. The captain had received when the vessel sailed £112 18, the first mate, Robert Champlin, £487 14 4, the total advances amounted to £1570 19 10. The total cargo of rum, amounting to 13,688 galls., came from Whitehorne, Cranston, Overing, Cooke, Coggeshall, Malbone, Mayson (Mason?), and Thurston. Champlin seems to have carried goods amounting to £591 15 for private trade.

[2] Word had reached Newport in February that the Fanny, Capt. Benjamin Hicks, had arrived at Barbados, where he had found an excellent market. He was evidently preparing for a prompt return to Africa. News Letter, Feb. 13, 1772.

but to lay a long time on the Coast to piddle with blacks must be against the voyage. keep it an entire secret what vessells are coming down on the Coast, as it may make the Castles indifferent about buying if they kno it.

211. William Snell and Company to Christopher Champlin, 1772.[1]

London, 25 June 1772.

Sir, Our mutual good Friends Messrs. Hayley and Hopkins, Informs us you intend Sending your Vesell the Adventure Cap: Tuell with a Cargoe of Slaves to the Grenada Market. If you will please to address them for Sale to our friends Messrs. Threlfal and Anderson at St. Georges in that Isle, we hereby guarantee the performance of any agreement they may make with Captn. Tuell for the Sale, also to pay all Bills they Draw or Endorse for the Produce being confident they can serve you in this way as well as any House there.

Robt. Coningham and Jno. Tatham of St. Vincents and Richd. Milford of Dominica, are also in this way of Business as well as in Sale of North American Cargoes, should any of your Vesells go that way they are safe men.

212. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Fletcher, 1772.[1]

D L'Mina Castle 25th July 1772.

S'r, This by Capt. Charles More will Acquaint you of My Arrival at this place after a passage of two Months all well. Since my Arrival have made but small progress in trade I have Disposed of twenty hog'ds Rum, part for Gold for 34 gallons for [an ounce?] and part for Slaves for 160 and 140, 2 Mo. Cr.[2] I find all the Vessels Which I expected was gone of the Coast Still on, at Annamaboe is Capt'ns Rogers, Barden, Jonhnson and Tawell [Tuell] all Rum Vessels. there Detention, is Occasioned by a Disturbance that broke out between the Fantines and Shantines which has Stop't the Slaves, as that Trade comes Chiefly threw their hands, And the Gentlemen that has taken Rum of them cannot gitt Slaves to pay them.

By what I can Learn from Capt. More of the preasent times is if there was any Slaves Stiring I believe it very Easy to Dispose of my [211] [1] Wetmore Papers, vol. V.

[212] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75 A. On May 2 Clarke gave to Fletcher a detailed account of his search for a vessel and of his purchase. On May 19 he wrote that he was ready to sail from Newport and asked Fletcher to obtain £400 stg. insurance on one-fourth the vessel and cargo, in the same manner that he placed his own, and to advance the premium. It is evident that Clarke owned one-fourth the vessel.

Rum, at what they gave, which was 170 for men and 150 for women, but as times is I Cannot tell how it will turn with me.

I shall leave this place for Cape Coast tomorrow and am Determin'd to Dispose of the Rum as Soon as possible, knowing of a large Quant'y on its passage from Rhode Island and Boston. . . .

213. Samuel and William Vernon to Richard Adams, 1772.[1]

Newport 8th Aug't 1772.

S'r, We have your fav'r of the 30th June before us, owning the receipt of ours of the 16th Decr. last. We observe that the reason of our balla. not being remitted was the distress of the Country by the Floods in May 1771, and not to what we suggested. You may be Assured we did not adopt those sentiments so fully, but that we Ordered Capt. Robt. Elliot, in our schooner Active, who called at Barbadoes in May last from Affrica, where if he did not obtain our limitts for his Cargo of Slaves, to proceed directly to James River and adress himself to you. His slaves becoming sickly thought best to sell something under our directions, and, arrived here about four Weeks pass.

*We have a Vessil just ready to sail for the Coast and that of Elliots will soon follow, wch perhaps, may fall in with you, except the Price of Slaves are high at Barbadoes; and hope you'll keep us advised of your Markets. . . .

*we never made any doubt but that our Balla. wou'd be remitted, with full Interest thereon as the purchasers was to allow it by the conditions of Sale, agreeable to what you wrote us.

214. Captain Samuel Tuell to Christopher Champlin, 1772.[1]

Annamaboe, Sept. 26th 1772.

Sir, I have wrote you by Capt. Boules the 16th June which wase the first opportunity, I had to right to you sence I left home,[2] which at the same Time I wrote This Letter, That is Enclosed in This, To

I sold 10 hhd. of Rum at the mines [Elmina] for gold; I maid no traid at Cape Coast. We arrived heare 24th day of May. Capt. Morse sold his cargo at the mines and Capt. Roggers sold his at Cape Coast. Capt. Bardine has sold all his cargo so that there is no Rum heare at preasant to sell but what I have. I have sold 45 hhd. I give but 160 for slaves as yet. I should due very well if there wase any black traid, but there is none and they are about going to war which makes it worse. I saw Mr. Brew But we had no talk about the sloop." This letter and that to which Tuell next refers are to be found in Commerce of R. I., I. 401-402, 411-412.

send by This Same Man, Capt. Johnson of Boston who was to sail the 20th June and has ben Detained by the Castles By Reason of The Trade being Stopt Till now. I Wrote To you, Sir when I wase to Leward, by Capt. Brews, but had not Time to keep a copye of the Letter, as The vessail wase under sail when I wrote It, I received yours Sir by Capt. Clarke the 4th August and By Capt. Hicks the 8th of this month, my Rum wase all Gone before Capt. Clarke Came Down, and have maid My Trade mostly with the Castles, as There wase no Black Trade going, I give 160 Gallons for men, and 140 for women as I cood not git Them for Less, I Have but 15 Slaves on board yet, and cant tell you Sir When I shall sail, but as soon as I can git my slaves From the Castles, if the Trade Groes better I shall git Them soon, if not I must Stay Longgar. I have seen Mr. Breese [Brew ?] but he says nothing To me about bying The Sloop, and I beleave it Dont Lie in his powers to buy Hur at preasent, I have met with Som misfortungs Sence I have ben on the Coast, I bought as Long boat and Lost hur, in a hard Squall of wind, She Drove a Shoare and when I wase to Léwerd, Capt Roggers boat came down and came on bord of me, and in the Night Two of his people and John Hardy and John Hammond,[3] took his boat and runaway With hur, and They never have ben heard on sence, this hapned The 2nd August, people will Think I suppose it was for ill uasceg but I say not, for my own people. the 2nd of August I buried Mr. Whyet [4] he dieed with the Feaver so That I am but Poorly mand at present. It has bene very sekly heare, I have bene sek my Self, and mr. Champlin has ben very ill, and is poorly now. I Shall Ship a hand or two if I Can Git Them.[5] . . .

Sir, . . .[2] I now further add, that, I Wrote you from D E L mina by Capt. More the 25 July where I acquaint'd you of my

[3] John Hardy was Tuell's cooper, John Hammond a sailor. They had received before sailing £102 19 and £48 respectively (Wetmore Papers, vol. V.). Much of the matter of this letter is to be found in a letter of Aug. 7, probably the one of which Captain Tuell kept no copy. Commerce of R. I., I. 411-412.

[4] David Wiat was the second mate.

[5] On Oct. 6 Tuell wrote from Anamabo: "I wrote you by Capt. Johnson the 26th Sept. and this comes by Capt. Roggers, the next that sails from heare will be Capt. Bardine . . . . Trade never was none to be so dul as it is now, not heare. I have but 15 slaves on board yet, I got one hande out of Capt. Johnson before he sailed" (Commerce of R. I., I. 419). On Nov. 6 Stevenson and Went wrote to the Champlins by Captain Moore, who was then in the Barbados and was soon to be in Newport, that Captain Tuell had sold his rum and might leave the coast early in October. safe Arrival on the Coast after a passage of 2 Months and that I had Sold about 20 Hhgd. Rum, and two or three Days after from Cape Coast I wrote a line over to Capt. more with a line or two for you Acquainting you I had Sold 50 hogd. to Mr. Mill and Bull [Bell] at 160 and 140 for 3 Months Cr. wich was all the trade I had then made. All the rest of the Rum I sold at the same price Except 35 Hogd. to Leward for 150 and 130. My purchase will Amount to 96 or 97 Slaves but as I have not got my provisions and water yet on board I cannot Justly tell, I am now at Cape Coast a filling up my water. When compleated, shall do my endeavour to Collect my Slaves as Soon as possible, and doubt not I shall be in Jamaica by the time I wrote Messr. Peatts and Westmorland, I have this further to add that the wants and Leakage of our Cargo Amounts but to 318 gallo's which I think we have been very Successful in, I cannot help adding that had it not been for this Unlucky P[a]laver I should not have been Six weeks on the Coast. . . .

London 24 Novr. 1772.

S'r, Your Fav'rs of the 2 and 19 May are now before Me, And note the Contents, and am well Satisfyed with Every thing done at Rhode Island About Purchasing the Brig Fletcher and her Cargo etc.

And hope this will meet you safe and well Arrived at Kingston, After a Successfull Voyage, on your Arrivel there you will deliver your Cargo of Slaves to Messrs. Peatts and Westmorland, Agreable to Former Instructions, who will dispose of them to the best Advantages for Bills of Exchange only; at as Short a Sight as they can obtain them; And as this Voyage finishes at Jamaica, on Closing their Sales and paying your bills of Disbursments etc. they are then to remit each party their respective Share of the neat proseeds Viz to send me bills for my half and deliver you the same for your Quarter part, as it will be best for all Concerned to make as short work of it as possible, otherwise it will by no means answer to carry Westmorland, in which he stated that his purchase was to be 96 slaves. These he had bargained to receive by Nov. 10 but since slaves were scarce on the coast he hardly expected to be slaved before the last of November. From Anamabo on Nov. 3 he sent a letter to the same firm by Captain Bardine, telling them that he had forty slaves and still hoped to complete his cargo in November, though trade was very dull. A copy of this letter he sent to Fletcher, adding: "I can asure you the Oldest Man on the Coast never new Such a Scarcity of Slaves as there is at Present, for there is Goodsmen here 6 Months and hass not got fifty Slaves on board, and are agiving 8 and 10 oz. for the blackmen and the Rum men 130 gal. to witemen. Our few Slaves is in good health and I hope will continew so." Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75A.

on this Trade to any Advantage; And in regard to your as well as the people Priveledge Slaves I think it will be the fairest way for the Concerned to Avaredge them with the Majorety of the Cargo; this matter I have mentioned to Messrs. Peatts and Westmorland, And is Commonly what is done out of Liverpool. However shall leave it Intirely to your self to do what seems most agreable, as I want nothing but the Just thing. When the Slaves are sold and Vessel clear, you must pay off the people their wages, and Ship new hands as you want them, Or gitt as many of the old as will stay with you and come the Voyage to England.

After which you will in Course, heave down and clean your Vessel, and put her in Proper order for that purpose. And be as frugal as possible in your Disbursments, And not run us to any Unnecessary Expence at Kingstown where every thing for Vessels Comes to Dear (which I Experienc'd with the Affrica) but As was so well found in every thing am in hopes little will be wanted new. I have desired Peatts and Westmorland to assist you to get a Freight, for London or Hull and to Dispatch you if possible in about Six weaks, with what they can get, Sugar, Rum, and a little mahogany. Being but a small Vessel I make no doubt they will do it in that time, as I would not have you lay longer even if you should get but 2/3 full as the Sooner you get to England the better, that if this Voyage Answers another may be Struck out more Considerable (in a larger Vessel). I mentioned in my former Letters, to the house, not to take produce on Account of the Slaves but rather than not help the Vessel with a little Freight, I have now order'd them to Ship for my Account from 10 to 15 punchions of Rum and Suppose you'l have no objection to put 8 or 10 on board on your Account, which with as many of theirs, will be some help to fill her up! Rum has been lower here this year but must answer next year if can be purchaced lower at Jamaica, (Strong proof and good flavor'd). I have desired Peatts and Westmorland to forward the first Set of my bills, by the next Vesel that offers after Recieving them, and not to keep them, till you Sail that no time may be lost here in Recieving, and if you think proper may send the first Sett for your Share, by the Same Oppertunity, to me and shall do the Same with them as my Own to get them Excepted. And the Second Set of yours and mine you may bring along with you and the third Set to be put on bourd some other Vessel before you Sail; you will also write me what Insurence you would have get done for your Account and direct to me at Mr. Hodgsons as Usual. I have paid all the bills you have Drawn on me from Rhode island, and as you Desir'd I get £400 St'g Insured for your Acc'nt with my own, round to Jamaica, the Expence of premium paid here etc was £35:17, which sum is all you debt. . . .

Newport, November [27], 1772.

Sir, Our Brig'n the Ann,[2] of which you are at present the Master, being loaded and ready for the Seas, Our orders to you are, That you Embrace the first fair wind and make the best of your way to the Coast of Africa; and as we have no opinion of the windward Coast trade, we think it advisable, That as Soon as you procure the necessary rice that you proceed without delay to Anamaboe road; When please God you arrive there safe Convert your cargo into good Slaves; on the best terms you can; You are not insensible that lying any considerable time on the Coast, is not only attended with a very heavy expense, But also great risk of the Slaves you may have on board. We therefore would recommend to you dispatch, even if you are obliged to give a few gallons more or less on each slave. . . . We here inclose you David Mill Esq. of Cape coast Castle's receipt for twenty seven men and thirteen women Slaves, left in his hands by Capt. Briggs the last voyage on our accounts payable to his or our order, which we have made payable to you; When you have finished the sales of your Cargo, apply to the said Mr. Mill and receive from him the above mentioned slaves, which from his universal character, we are confident he will not only immediately comply but will also deliver you slaves to your satisfaction; To these slaves we desire you'll put some particular mark that may distinguish them from those of the Cargo, so that their sales in the West Indies may be kept by itself, for the Insurance on these is not blended with the Cargo.

You are to be particularly careful, that as soon as you have got your slaves on board, and before you leave the Coast you are to fill up two Sets of bills of lading; The one mentioning the number of Slaves you have on board, bought with your Cargo, which are two-thirds on acct. of Aaron Lopez, and the other third on account of Jacob Rod Rivera; And another set for the forty slaves you receive from Mr. Mill, those are one-half on each our Accts, and remit us by Two different Opp'ts, One of each of these bills of lading, and the third carry with you; for in case of accident (which God forbid) we have no other way of proving our Interest than by a bill of lading.

When thus you have finished your trade on the Coast, you are to proceed directly to the Island of Jamaica when if you arrive in any time between the first of December and the first of July, you

[2] The Cargo of the Ann, a brigantine of 113 tons, consisted of: 98 hhd., 14 tierces New England rum, 8¼ casks Lisbon wine, 3½ bbl. Madeira wine, 19 kegs cordial, 2 tierces loaf sugar, 2 bbl. brown sugar, 1 bbl. molasses, 1 bbl. vinegar, 30 sheep, 39 turkeys, 28 geese, 21 ducks, "and provender." are to goe directly to Savanah La Mar, and there deliver your whole quantity of slaves on our Acco'tt to Capt. Benjamin Wright, in whose hands we shall lodge whatever future orders we may have occasion to give you; But if you arrive off of Jamaica in any time between the month of July and the first of December, then you are not to proceed to Savanah La Mar, but to Kingston in that Island, and there apply to Mr. Thomas Dolbeare merchant there, to whom you are to deliver your slaves on our Accts and in whoes hands we shall also lodge, whatever orders we may find necessary further to give you, and if on inquiry you find when you arrive at Kingston, that Capt'n Wright is in any part of the Island, you are desired to send him immediate intelligence of your arrival, But this is not to prevent the delivery of the Slaves to Mr. Dolbeare as aforesaid, and should Cap'n Wright not be at Savanah La Mar when you arrive there, nor in any part of Jamaica, in that case dispatch an express to Mr. Dolbeare at Kingston, and follow what orders you may receive from him. Either Capt. Wright or Mr. Dolbeare will have orders to load our Brig with the produce of the Island if the season of the year will permit it, Therefore as soon as you have delivered your slaves, and your vessel ready, proceed directly back to this port.[3] . . .

Anamaboe Rd Mar. 10th, 1773.

Gentlemen: I arrived att Cape Corse Castle on the 12th of February, where on my arrival apply'd to Gov'r Mill and gave him the offer of my Cargo on Various Terms from one hundred and eighty gall'n to Two hundred for men and in proportion for women but would not take itt on any terms his answer was that he could not pay me Slaves in Eighteen Months he owing a great many Slaves and Every Ship to take their turn to be paid according to their Contract. I handed the Stock that I had for Mr. Mill being 27 Sheep 16 Geese 12 Ducks and five turkeys which was all that I had left. I also acquainted Mr. Mill that I had his obligation for forty Slaves Left by Capt'n Briggs in your favor. these Slaves Mr. Mill told me he would Deliver when I was ready to Sail. Here is very poor times for every fort and private house is stocked with Rum that there is Noe Selling of Rum Nor anything else. I have Not Been five Nights on board since my arrival but Continually Cruising from one fort to another Striveing to Sell my Cargoe, after I had tryed the South of the Gold Coast and finding itt impossible to Sell to advantage, I struck with Mr. Henrick Woortman for four thousand Galln. att Two hundred Gall'n for man and one hundred and Eighty for women payable in Three months. I also sold Three Thousand Galln. more to Various Private Traders att 190 Gn. and 195 for men and in proportion for women. These are the only terms that I could sell any part of the Cargoe and I find that the Market grows worse instead of grown better for this day has been Given 210 Galln. to the Gentlemen where I Dine for men Slaves and three months Credit. Gentlemen, I have but five Slaves on board and God knows when I shall have five more for the Country Trade is so Dull and Slaves Scarce that itt puts Every Man to attend that has the Command of a Vessel here at present. What time to appoint that I should Gett off itt is nott in any power for there is noe man att present comes up to his engagement. But I have hopes of Gett my pay according to Contract as Henrich Woortman, Esq., has the most to pay and the Longest Credit, and he Reconed to be the Best pay and Least in Debt of any Governor on the Gold Coast at present, therefore I am in hopes of Getting off Sometime in June.[2]

He had already learned that the price of slaves on the coast was 150 iron bars, the equivalent of 200 gallons of rum. Ibid., pp. 17-18.

His rum found no market as neither English nor Dutch governors would take it, and his Lisbon wine was unacceptable on the coast, where Madeira was preferred. [2] On Jan. 7, 1773, Stevenson and Went wrote to the Champlins that Captain Tuell had not yet arrived. They had at that time just sold the cargo of Captain Rogers at £36 and £35 stg. Tuell reached Barbados Feb. 13 with 94 slaves, from a purchase of 95, which Stevenson and Went took at £35 per head. There are 13 slaves unaccounted for in the sale, part of whom may have been the privilege slaves of the captain and mate. Commerce of R. I., I. 428, 429.

Kingston Jamaica 24th March 73.

Sir, I omitted writing you on my first Arrival by the Oppertunity of the Manawar [man of war] by being at the Palasaids aheaving down the Brig. I now make you Acquainted that Every thing that is Nessesary of that Kind is done and we are a loading as fast as possible for Hull, And shall Sail in ten Days or a fortnight at which place or at London I hope I shall have the pleasure Of seeing you. As to our African Voyage Messrs. Peatts and Westmorland has mad you fully Acquainted with and likewise their Transactions at Kingston All of which I hope may meet you Approbations.

I am Excessive Sorry you have Order'd the Brig home as I must forego some Advantageous Ingagements I had made on the Coast, which where to be fulfild in August, or then Voy'd. It gives Me great Happiness to have my Transactions at Rhode Island meets your Approbations which I hope may be the fate of Every Other on this Voyage. I noted your paragraft in your letter where you intended going more largely into the trade I am ready to Join you as far as my ability will Allow, and shall be glad if you will make all the Preparations in Your power as I do not want to Stay longer in England.[2]

223. COURT ORDER CONCERNING RICHARD BREW, 1773.[1]

Rhode Island
Kings County } ss. George the Third by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, etc.

To the Sheriff of our County of Bristol or Newport in our Colony of Rhode Island, etc. and to his Deputy Greeting.

[2] There is nothing in the margin.

[3] During this month a somewhat questionable item appeared in the Gazette: "Newport, June 7. Capt. Dagget, who arrived last week from a whaling cruise upon the coast of Africa, informs that in March last, at the Island of St. Thomas, he met with the ship Liberty, Capt. Richard Crump, of this port, with between 3 and 400 slaves on board, bound to Barbados" (Gaz. and News Letter, June 17, 1773, Supp.). While the editor hesitates to make the positive assertion that no Rhode Island vessel of this period had such capacity as is here indicated, such vessels were certainly unusual.

Newport, 21 Sep, 1773.

Sirs, We this moment reciev'd a line from Cap'n Duncan of 6 Int. acquainting us, that from the commencement of the Sale of his Slaves to that day, an [one] only of the Cargo was sold, and that a small Boy for £38.10 Cur'y [2] that the Men you held up to £55. We are truly sorry to find your market so extream dull and indeed low, to what they are in almost all the West India Islands, and upon the Southern Continent of America. If the price woud be inhanc'd by giving some Cred't upon intrest with good security we have no objection, but as to taking Produce it will not answer our purpose—except it be for a few Tons of good Hemp if to be had at £35 pr Ton and twelve or fifeteen hhds of good Mountain Tobacco, as we are well inform'd it can be bought from 10/ to 12/ P.C. Cap'n Duncan tells us his Corn is ready to take on board we in our first Letter inform'd you, it would not do to ship it, we have not more to add than to beg you'd dispatch the Vessil.

sale of her Cargo. 57 were sold the first day averaging £63 and 4 d ½, clear of duty, 14 the third day at £51, 22 the fifth day at £32, the remainder at £8 only. had there been five times as many, and the Negroes good, they would have sold at the price they did the first day. there were a number of old men, but the Boys went off very high. I find there are 14 Privelege Slaves which I think is large, and will take from the Cargo considerably. I shall conform to the terms accepted, tho' the decease of Mr. Winn and the uncertainty of the goodness of the Negroes laid me under some disadvantage. I have acted from principle, Gentlemen in the sale of this Cargo, and I hope it will be satisfactory, my intent has been that it should. I am now at Port Royal dispatching a Vessell, that I am much in haste, but hope in a few days to be at leisure when I shall write you.

We have this day accounts confirming the Negro Contract with the King of Spain, but we find the 27/6 is not to be taken off.[3] . . .

227. Captain William English to Rivera and Lopez, 1773.[1]

Kingston Jamaica, Nov. 14, 1773.

Gentlemen, . . . Gentlemen I buried one man slave since my Last and the Swelling Begin to Rang so Voilent among the Slaves that Nine of them was Sold for a mere trifel and had not the whole Being sold in a few Days I beleive I should Lost one half of the whole and yett when I arrived there was But Two Slaves that had the Least Sign of Swelling. This Disorder first Begun in their feet and worked upward when Gott as far as their Stomach they Dyed in a few hours. There has been Three ships cargoes of Slaves sold since my arrival and none of there Averages exceeded the Brgantine's not five shillings in a slave therefore I doe not think that this markett is as Good as the Merchants here says itt out to be.

Here is Lately arrived some Spanish Gentlemen which I am informed has brought one hundred Thousand Dollars to Buy Slaves

The sale was set for Oct. 13; the terms were credit at four, eight, and twelve months. Ibid., I. 455-456.

[3] On Oct. 8 Dolbeare had written: "We have authentic enteligence of a Contract being made between the Kings of Great Britain and Spain whereby it is settled that the Spaniards are to be supplied with Negroes, at Kingston in the Island of Jamaica for Cuba and the Main at £60 per head, to be continued for 5 years, that they are allowed 3 bbl. flour to every Negro, that the duty of 30/ Currency to be taken off and 2/6 only to be paid on importation, when it is to commence and other particulars is not yet transpired. The planters here are much disgusted" (ibid., I. 456). This contract called forth from Bryan Edwards the suggestion that the navigation acts of Great Britain ought to be lightened in favor of Spain. He believed the increase in trade would require twenty more vessels to bring negroes from Africa to the West Indies.

[227] [1] Terry, Newport Hist. Soc., Bulletin, no 62, pp. 25-26. Captain English arrived at Jamaica on Oct. 7, after a passage of eighty-five days, during which he had buried five negroes from the cargo of the Ann and one from that of the Cleopatra. The remaining eighty-nine were in good health at the time of his arrival. Ibid., p. 24.

and here is att present but one Vessell with Slaves and Yett they will not Give as Good a price as the planters Gives, For this Day I have bein informed by a Gentleman that belongs to the house that this Vessell is addressed to that they offered But a hund'd and fifty Dollars and have Refuse Thirty out of a hundred and thirty. Therefore any further particulars Relative to this Spanish Contract and the Average of the Brigantine Slaves I refer to Mr. Dolbeares Letters. Here is a King packett which will Sail for falmouth the 22d Inst. on board of which If Mr. Dolbeare fulfill's his agreement I will be able to Dispatch one Sett of Bills for the Cargoe on your acc'ts. Should Mr. Dolbeare fall short in his promise and the Packett should sail Before the Bill is Drawn the next opportunity will Be in the Ship Nancy Capt. Brown for London which is to Sail by the Last of this month.

As for the Cash to load the Brigintine, Mr. Dolbeare has told me he had Riddy, this Day we have Received News that Mollases in the Mole [2] has fell from 26 Sous to 21 which if Mr. Dolbeare Dispatches me to the time agreed upon I may have a chance to Load the Brigintine on Reasonable terms.

228. Thomas Dolbeare to Rivera and Lopez, 1773.[1]

Kingston, Jamaica, November 20, 1773.

Gentlemen, Since my last, I have yours covering a Letter to Captain Einglish, who I purpose dispatching for Mole Cape Nicola with the £800 about the 13th of next Month, as I told him when the Cargo was deliver'd me. I find the £800 on Cargo, with the nearly £800 privelidge, the Captains Coast Commissions, and the Duty of 30/ per head there will be £1900 at least, to pay Captain Einglish in Money. I think there are generous Priveliges allowed out of your port. The gross Sale of the 102 Negroes per the Ann, is £5187 this Currency; out of which the 14 Privelige are to be taken. Negroes continue in demand, the Spaniards are now here on purchase, one of them bro't 100,000 Dollars, but they appear to expect them at low rates, for they as yett, have offered but £38 Sterling, to have the first choice, which will never do, for if I recollect right, the Ann's Cargo averaged the first day, with the Duty £45.15/ Sterling. It appears by what I have been able to collect, that England and Spain's Monarchs have adjusted and concluded the Contract for a number of years; what number we have not yet understood. they are to send their ships to what of the English West Indies they may chuse, and not to be limited to this Island as was reported, that they can give from 270 to 290 Dollars per head, but about £25 the Condition of this Cargo of Negroes being carried on under the Firme of T. D. and Co. which is the reason of the Accounts being under that Signature. Negroes continue at £64 and Duty for Men, Women at £62 and Duty of 20/. Two Ships have arrived this week with 700 Negroes from Annamaboe. endeavours on my part have been that this Voyage should be successfull. How far I have been an Instrument towards it doubtless youll form a Judgement.[3] . . .

[3] From the Mole Captain English wrote two letters before he completed his cargo of molasses (ibid., pp. 27-28). These and other letters of the period bear witness to the fact that the British ports which received the negroes were often unable to supply return cargoes.

234. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Fletcher, 1774.[1]

Newport 10th February, 1774.

Sir. . . . We have had no accounts from Affrica Since the 9 July then as Usual Complaints of bad times. There is Sailed Since I Arrived from the Coast two Schooners from Salem belonging to Capt. Darby And a brig Belonging to Jo' and Wm. Wanton and a Sloop belonging to John Collins from this place.[2] . . .

N B I saw a Guare[n]tee to Mr. Lopez wherein Gabriel H Ludlow, Nicholass Hoffman, and Charles Shaw of New York Guarentee The house of Alexr: Gillon and Co. of Charles Town South Carolina [3] To him or his friends as far as one Thousand Slaves the Bill to be Pd. at 3, 6 and 9 ms. Slaves Averidging now there about £45.

Febry 24th 1774.

I now Add that Since I wrote the foregoing Capt: Sebury arriv'd from the Coast, Left Anamaboe the 16th October and says that they where giving from 210 to 220 Gallons at that time which I assure you is very Discouraging. . . .

235. John Fletcher to Captain Peleg Clarke, 1774.[1]

London 22nd February, 1774.

Sir, If you Remember we had Some Conversation Before you left London Relative to a Dry Good Cargo for Guinea, and if your Stay on the Coast Should be so long as the Rum Men Now meet with, you will have Sufficient time to make your Self Acquaintd with that Trade and if you Should find you Could Engage with any of the Goveners or Factors to take from you on your Return there in about Nine Months after your Departure £2500 or £3000 Sterling worth of Dry goods properly assorted According To Memorandum and Pattern of the Sorts of Cloath Wanted, etc. You are well Assur'd that I could on your Arrival get you Such a Cargo put up in a Month or Six Weeks Time and most of the Guinea Goods on 12 Months Credit, which I think will be making the most of Time Provided you Can be Well Assur'd of Getting of the Cargo Without much Delay.

[234] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75 A. On Jan. 13, 1774, Clarke urged Peatt and Westmorland to hasten the despatch of the Fletcher under Captain Stockford, as he expected her to sail for Africa three weeks after her arrival in Newport. He added a caution concerning the money to be given the captain since doubloons and pistoles were difficult to pass in Rhode Island.

[2] Evan and Francis Malbone, of Newport, had asked Clarke to procure for them in Boston 14 bolts Russia duck and 8 or 10 pieces of "Ravens" duck for sails for a vessel which they were outfitting for Guinea. Nov. 5, 1773, Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75 A.

[3] For Alexander Gillon (afterwards Commodore) see D. E. Huger Smith in S. C. Mag. Hist., IX. 189-219, and C. O. Paullin, The Navy of the American Revolution, pp. 435-440.

[235] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 75 A.

But this must Depent upon Circumstances and According as you may find Trade on the Coast, as Nothing Can be Determined on till your Arrival there and Shall leave it to your Self to make Such Engagments as Shall Seem most for our Mutual Advantage. But if the Rum Trade is like to Continue any thing Tollerable and you Can Engage another Cargo at your Return to the Coast, (as Mentiond in my former Letter), you must in Such case Keep on the old Track with Molasses from Jamaica or the Moles and Return to Rhode Island. Only as we have now Peaceable times, and Don't know how long they may Continue, I Shall be glad to make the most of the Time present As war will Frustrate all our Guinea Schemes. Upon Setling for the Thames and her Disbursments you will Send me Duplicates of the Several Accounts With Reciepts which may be put up In aparcel and Sent by Shand or Rogers to be Deliver'd by themselves, and keep Copyes of the same by you at Newport for your own Satisfaction, you will also give me timely advice when you Draw the Bills, and Mention in the Body of the Bills for what Account, and where you have alarge Sum to Pay as may be the Cause at Messrs. Malbones you will Divide the Sum into Two or three lesser Bills not of the Same Date, to prevent Mistakes, which will be more Convenient for me here.

As to the Fletchers Disbursments, etc. you'll Observe the Directions given in the Joint Letter, the whole to be Divided into Fourths and a Bill on each owner for their Share to save Trouble and any further Account here. I have Requested the favour of Messrs. Malbones of a Creditt of £200 or £300 Sterling in part of the Rum you may take from them provided it is not Inconvenient, as I can with more ease pay it at the latter end of the year or Send them out Hemp in the fall.

Our Liverpool Tender Andromack not yet Arrived in the West Indias to Bring Round any Bills to Attest me from that Quarter will make things Rather heavy—so many Payments Coming about the Same time. This favour I have Some Right to Ask of Messrs. Malbones but if Should not Suit them I have no Doubt of Getting through it one way or an other, and Do not let them hinder you in the least in pursuing the Instructions Given. I am now making preparations for you by Lodging Money with my Friend P Hodgson and A Peatts to answer your Bills.

I have made no Insurance On the Fletcher from Jamacai to the Mole, and Rhode Island if you Chuse to get any thing done on her at Newport Can act in that Respect as you Please for your Share as you will have much earlyer Advices from Capt. Stockford and when to expect Him than I can, which as Soon as you hear from him give me a Line.[2]

236. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Fletcher, 1774.[1]

Newport 22 April 1774.

Dear Sir, . . . Our Schooner Nancy has on Board for Cargo 5665 Gallons Rum, 6 Barrels Flour, 12 Barrels Pitch, 6 Barrels Tarr, Six Boxes Soap, Provisions and 2500 feet Boards. She and her Cargo and out fitt will stand in about 750 £ Sterling the nearest Calculations. . . .

Now for the Brigg Thames I have her Grav'd and Shall begin to load to Morrow or Monday having 150 Hhds Rum ready to take on Board, and hope to Sail in all May. Molasses is and has been very Scarce all this Spring But what I have purchas'd has been at 35 / per Gallon and I See no likelyhood of getting it Cheaper. . . . And I have purchased of Saml Johnson one hundred Hogshead of Rum. . . .

N.B. If you insure I Shall be obliged to you to Insure about 125 on Schooner Nancy on my account to the Coast and while there before Sold and 300 on Snow Fletcher enough to make you whole in case of Accident

237. John Fletcher to Captain Peleg Clarke, 1774.[1]

London 30th Apriel 1774.

D'r Sir, I have now before me Your Favours of the 10th and 20 Feby, with Copy's Inclosing Accot Sales of Thames's Cargo with Your Accot Currt, a Ballance due the Owners of £714. 4. 8 which Acco't I have not had time to examine, but make no doubt its wright.

I obsarve what You Say about the price of Molasses which I hope you have been able to purchase on Easyer Tirmes and that You have finish'd all your Business at Rhode Island to Your mind and Sail'd from thence Long before this Letter reaches there, as well as the Snow Fletcher, Captn: Stockford who I hope came in time with his Molasses.

As I wrote you fully in my late Letters concarning the Thames and Fletcher have nothing new to add. I observe the advance of Slaves on the Coast per Latest Accounts from 210 to 230 Galls, which to be Sure is high, all I can Say is You can afford to give as much as an other and my Desire is that when You Arive on the Coast You Strike immeeditly for Your Cargo of Rum (for Dispach Sake) and not higgle about it too Long as generaly the first offer most likely will be as much as You will gitt after from the Number of Rum Vessells going on the Coast. Am glad to find you have Declined thoughts of any further alterations in the Thames at preasant, as we have been at a deal of Expence already without any Profit, I hope we shall be more able after this Voyage, to do anything to her may be thought Necessary.[2] . . .

238. An Act for Prohibiting the Importation of Negroes, June, 1774.[1]

An Act prohibiting the importation of Negroes into this Colony.

Whereas, the inhabitants of America are generally engaged in the preservation of their own rights and liberties, among which, that of personal freedom must be considered as the greatest; as those who are desirous of enjoying all the advantages of liberty themselves, should be willing to extend personal liberty to others;

Therefore, be it enacted by this General Assembly, and by the authority thereof it is enacted, that for the future, no negro or mulatto slave shall be brought into this colony; and in case any slave shall hereafter be brought in, he or she shall be, and are hereby, rendered immediately free, so far as respects personal freedom, and the enjoyment of private property, in the same manner as the native Indians.

Provided, nevertheless, that this law shall not extend to servants of persons travelling through this colony, who are not inhabitants thereof, and who carry them out with them, when they leave the same.

Provided, also, that nothing in this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to any negro or mulatto slave, belonging to any inhabitant of either of the British colonies, islands or plantations, who shall come into this colony, with an intention to settle or reside, for [238] [1] "Proceedings of the General Assembly," R. I. Col. Recs., VII. 251-253. On May 17, at a town meeting in Providence, the following resolution was agreed upon: "we are of opinion that an universal stoppage of all trade with Great Britain, Ireland, Africa, and the West Indies, until such time as the port of Boston shall be reinstated in its former privileges, etc., will be the best expedient in the case; and that a proper time should be generally agreed on for the same universally to take place.

"Whereas the inhabitants of America are engaged in the preservation of their rights and liberties; and as personal liberty is an essential part of the natural rights of mankind, the Deputies of the town are directed to use their endeavours to obtain an act of the General Assembly, prohibiting the importation of negroe slaves in this Colony; and that all negroes born in the Colony should be free at attaining to a certain age." a number of years, therein; but such negro or mulatto, so brought into this colony, by such person inclining to settle or reside therein, shall be, and remain, in the same situation, and subject in like manner to their master or mistress, as they were in the colony or plantation from whence they removed.

Provided, nevertheless, that if any person, so coming into this colony, to settle or reside, as aforesaid, shall afterwards remove out of the same, such person shall be obliged to carry all such negro or mulatto slaves, as also all such as shall be born from them, out of the colony with them.

Provided, also, that nothing in this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to any negro or mulatto slave brought from the coast of Africa, into the West Indies, on board any vessel belonging to this colony, and which negro or mulatto slave could not be disposed of in the West Indies, but shall be brought into this colony.

Provided, that the owner of such negro or mulatto slave give bond to the general treasurer of the said colony, within ten days after such arrival in the sum of £100, lawful money, for each and every such negro or mulatto slave so brought in, that such negro or mulatto slave shall be exported out of the colony, within one year from the date of such bond; if such negro or mulatto be alive, and in a condition to be removed.

Provided, also, that nothing in this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to any negro or mulatto slave that may be on board any vessel belonging to this colony, now at sea, in her present voyage.

And to prevent any slave or slaves from being clandestinely brought into this colony, in order that they may be free, and liable to become chargeable.

Be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all persons, so offending, shall be liable to, and pay, a fine of £100, lawful money, for each and every one so brought in, to and for the use of the colony, to be recovered in the same manner that other fines and forfeitures usually are, by the laws of this government.

And also, all persons, who shall be convicted of receiving, harboring, or concealing, any such negro or mulatto slave, within this colony, he or they, so offending, shall be liable to the like penalty, to be recovered and applied in the same manner; and such negro or mulatto shall be sent out of the colony, as other poor persons are, by law.[2]

[2] Du Bois (Suppression of the Slave Trade, pp. 35-36) calls attention to the care with which the act, while it forbade the importation of slaves, protected the slave trader. In 1779 the Rhode Island Assembly took a further step by forbidding the exportation of slaves from the state, but nothing was done which actually restricted the commerce in slaves. *R. I. Col. 239. Hayley and Hopkins to Aaron Lopez, 1774.[1]

[London] 20 July, 1774.

Sir, . . . The Deborah proved a very unsaleable Vessel for this place, as her dimensions were very unsuitable for any European Trade, the smallness of her Hold in particular was a heavy objection; We wrote down to Liverpool agreable to your directions and two of the Merchants there who are concerned in the African Trade have since her arrival been to view her with thoughts of purchasing her, but they both declined taking her, assuring us that though she was constructed in the manner usual for the Trade from Rhode Island to Africa, she would by no means suit for the Trade from Liverpool.[2] . . .

We are glad to see Captain Wright had made you a satisfactory Sale of the Cleopatra's Cargo of Slaves: We hope he did the like with that of the Africa, who we find was arrived there and her Cargo sold; There can be no doubt he must have done well with that Cargo as you had given him a limitation of price. . . .

London 30th July 1774

Dear Sir, . . . From the non Import and Export Agreement Which is like to take place in general through North America whch you wass advised of before you left newport it will be a Circumstance at preasant in Your favour, in that case the rum Trade will be Knock'd up and no guinamen fitted out from Boston or Rhode island etc. till the Boston Port Bill is Repealed which may not be this Some time as his Maj'y and his Ministers seem Obstinant in the Affair. However do not [let] those Uncartain matter cause you to over Stand your market but Accept of the first good offer for the Cargo And gitt Dispach'd as Soon as you can

I hope on your Arival at Annamaboe you found the Nancy and Fletcher safe and well, and the former had disposed of her cargo as she came along down the Coast, And the latter Capt: Stockford in a fair way of geting off his Cargo, And as its most likely he will be able to leave the Coast first, And in Order to bring Bills round to me here Sooner, I would have you in Such case Send 20 or 30 Slaves on Freight by the Fletcher of the Thames and Nancy Cargo Purchasd as the former will have plenty of room for more Slaves than [239] [1] Commerce of R. I., I. 500-501.

[2] Nevertheless, Hayley and Hopkins succeeded in selling the Deborah for £480, but £20 below the price they asked.

her Cargo will Purchass, and will be a help to the Vessell, and ameans of Dispatching her Sooner, as a month or two Saved in time is a considerable object at preasant, as should be glad the Fletcher may gitt to Jamaica in the Month of Jany and your Self these Soon after as you can, the Slaves on Fright to be Sold by Messrs. Peatts and Westmorland upon a Average with the rest of the Cargo. In regard to the Place of Sale of your Thames's Cargo Slaves I mentiond in my former Montegerbay [2] and the two houses that would be Guaranteed to me are Eqully good. Mr. Clarke am told is clever and has Sold a number of Slaves this Year. However am likewise Informed that Mr. Montague is no wayes short of him and if you Should go to that Port and he will take you up which I rather wish may be case as Hibberts and Co. Bills are as good as the Bank and will tell well here, which is very Material in our Large Concarn, but in case you should have a fine Cargo of Likely Coramantees,[3] as last Voyage, I don't know if Kingston would not be the best Market. Am told Mr. Hibberts hass Sold all his prime Cargoes of Bonny and Gould Cost Cargos in Town, and the bite and Calabar Ships he hass sent to Montegua bay. However I shall leave this Matter to you to Act as shall seem best, if you Should go to Kingston you will give the preference to Mr. Hibberts House to Sell your Cargo, with whome you will make the best Shortest termes you can, without Mr. Ford will give you Shorter sighted bill's, in which Case he is to have the Preference but not otherwaiss, but if Your Cargo should prove but Indiferent you must then take a Country Sail and go to Montegubay as before directed. And as the Terms are left to Your Self, you will no doubt Enter into in writing as to the len[g]th of your bills and time of Dispatch etc. before you put the Slaves in their hands. I shall write Mr. Hibberts on the Occasion Aquainting them of your being a part Owner and have the liberty to make the Termes with whom you please and that Offers best which may be of Service.

You will find a letter for you at each of Mr. Hibbert's Houses with any further Instructions that may Occur for Your further Government.[4] . . .

duering her Trade there and to Markit with her Slave Value on Vessil £400, on Cargo £1000. She will leave this Harbour in about 10 Days. The Capt is an Experanced man, hath Orders to Sell upon the Coast if can obtain our Price, therefore please to make provision for return of Premium if that shou'd hapen.

We have never made enquiry, if an Insurrection of the Slaves shou'd hapen, and a Loss arise thereon more or less if your Underwritters pay in that Case please to let us know. . . .

Cape Coast Castle 30th Septr [17]74.

Gentlemen, I recd. by Capt. English of yr Brig Ann[2] your favr: but have not setled with him the Affair relative to the Slaves formerly due the Cleopatra, when Capt. Braggs comes I shall settle it to your Satisfaction

The 50 Ankers Capt. English bro't me were charged me 2/6 Sterl'g each, which is double the Sum I ever paid for many hundreds I have had from America; therefore it is my desire that you do not ship the remainder of my order per Capt. Burke unless they can be laid in at 1/3 Ster'g each.[3]

[2] The Ann, having returned to Newport after obtaining her cargo of molasses at the Mole, was again despatched to the African coast in the spring of 1774. For this voyage we have the report on her insurance from Hayley and Hopkins: "The Insurance desired on the Ann for Africa, etc., (is) effected and herewith you have the Account thereof, your 2/3 of premio, etc., thereon being £89. 6. 4 is to your debit. The premio on these Voyages has for some time past been only 7 Guineas several have been done at that rate both by Mr. Lane's house and ours, the first of which was as you observed Mr. Mawdsleys Brig the Mary, in doing which our two Houses went hand in hand, and by so doing effected that which neither of us could have accomplished any other way. The great success which the African Vessels have had was the inducement." Hayley and Hopkins to Aaron Lopez, April 29, 1774. Commerce of R. I., I. 494.

can at 140 to 160 Gold, when you arrive at Annamabo, If the price of Slaves given to the Factories exceeds 140 to 160 Gold, It is our advice you endeavour to make what Trade you can with the blacks for a month or six Weeks, untill you find what price the Castles will finally lower their Slaves too. If you find the black Trade brisk so that you may git of in three or four months, we advise that you finish your Trade with them, but shou'd it be Slack and no prospect of giting of in a reasonable time, then we recomend your selling what Rum you may have on hand to the Castles on the best Terms in your Power. in this you must act as circumstances and things appear, not being too much in haste, as no Ruin can come on your back. When your Trade is finished, proceed to Barbados, call on Messrs. Went and Son with whom you will find our further orders lodged, also at M'rs Crawfords. Enquire at both those Houses for letters from Thredfal and Anderson of the Granados,[2] but if you find no letters from either of us, We then wou'd have you sell your Slaves. to Went and Son at thirty Six pounds round good and bad or for as much more as you can git provided they will give their own bill on London at Eight months Sight for the neet proceeds of your Cargo or pay you half in money and bills for the other half. If they will not comply with this price, then proceed to the Granados and aply to Tredfal and Anderson. If they will assure you of o[b]taining £38 Stg. round or more for your whole Cargo and give their own bills on London for the neat amount of the same at six, Twelve and Fifteen months sight, then put your Cargo in their hands upon them Terms. If they will not take you up upon those Terms and your Slaves in health and Spirits, then proceed to Kingstown in Jamaica, where Aply to Mesrs. Joseph and Eliphalet Fitch and put your Cargo in their hands to be sold on the best Terms in their power remitting us by you in bills on London at three months sight or on NYork the same, and the Exchange Dollar for Dollar Sell your Sloop if Possible. take five hundred Dollars for her if you can git no more. be frugal in expences, Studdy Peace in your Vessell and make Dispatch, give M Bell the refusall of the 40 Kegs Rum. If any Misfortune happens either to Vessell and Cargo make a protest at the first English port you git too.[3]

Threlfal had written to the Champlins: "We are in great hopes our late Act will be soon repealed, when she [we] shall be enabled to sell Slaves as usual" (Commerce of R. I., I. 521). This probably refers to the duty act against which the English merchants were protesting in 1773. Lillian M. Penson, Colonial Agents of the West Indies, p. 111.

BARBADOS Twenty Seventh Nov. 1774.

Gentlemen: This, via Philadelphia, just Serves to advise that your Brig't Ann arrived here the Evening before last from Cape-Coast wth One hundred and twelve Slaves consisting of Thirty five Men, fifteen Men Boys, Twenty one Boys, Twenty Nine Women, Two Women-Girls, and nine Girls, and I assure you 'tis as good a Rum Cargoe as I ever Saw, for in the whole parcell 'tis impossible that any Person can object to more than five. Capt. English [left] the Coast in a poor State of Health [the] third Ulto. and died the Twenty-f[irst] Inst, so that the Vessell is now Com[manded] by Charles Davis, who applied to me for [torn] to purchase Necessaries which I shall [supply] him with, and, in case he can get his [torn] fill'd he will Sail early this afternoon [for Ja]maica. LONDON, Decemb. 22th 1774.

Sir, I wrote you several Letters to the Coast Some of which may have come to hand, my last Was the principal dated the 3th Inst: much to same purpose as this which was forwarded by Capt Darling per a Vessel his owners ware sending to Annamaboe with Govrs Stores, He being lately arrived from Montego Bay, whare he offer'd his Gold coast Cargo To Mr. Clarke to sell for him. But he refused taking him up on which Darling was obliged to Dispose of them him self, and give Credit till Next crop, And is shortly to return to desire for account of Mr. Geo. Champlin as above on the Sloop Adventure, for premio of which debited your Account £35. 11. 9 as per Account herewith" (C. Champlin to George Hayley, Nov. 24, 1774, Champlin Letter-Book, no. 135; Hayley to Champlin, Feb. 10, 1775, Commerce of R. I., II. 7). The Champlin Invoice Book in the Shepley Library contains the invoice for this voyage.

[245] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76. This letter with slight alterations is repeated in the Letter-Book under the same date. The letters between Clarke and Fletcher which follow illustrate clearly the difficulties which the approach of war and the actual outbreak of hostilities imposed upon merchants attempting to pursue their usual trade. The frequency of Fletcher's letters and the minuteness of his instructions indicate great anxiety on his part, an anxiety which was justified, since, in spite of his care, Captain Clarke did not receive his instructions until after the cargo had been disposed of. It is noticeable that the captain has carefully inscribed upon the owner's letters the date of receipt, that there might be no suspicion that he had failed to carry out orders.

Jamaica To collect his money, which may be a work of Time and disagreable Circumstances to the Owners. Since I came to Town I wrote to Mr. Dalpratt of Bristol for a Guarantie for your Cargo, which he refused as he says he has Mr: Fords orders not to do it for any more at present by which youle see What you have to Depend on. your Chief reliance Must now be upon Mr. Hibberts house And I have had some talk with Mr. Purrier, one of the Houses hear, to whome is of opponion that as yours will be a Gold Coast Cargo that there will be no Doubt but that Mr. Hibbert will take you up at Kingston which he thinks the most likely place to go to, whare if such Slaves are not in demand which is Seldome The case you have several ports at leward under Your command to, you are therefore on receipt of this letter to make the best of your way for Kingston in Jamaica whare you are to apply to Mr. Thomas Hibberts, Senr: and Junior for the Sale Of your Cargo, either at Kingston or Lewarde as they shall think best. And as to the Terms, shall Leave that to you to make the best with them you can. Mr. Purrier says the last Bills That came upon them for a Guinee Cargo wass at 12 15 and 18 Months sight which is a grate lenth in Deed. However you must be governd by whatever is customary at the time of your arrival with them. And this we are Certain of whatever that House Engages to do will be safe, which is meterial Affair these times, thairfore do not stand out upon triffels or a little more time on Bills. These Difficultys about taking up Guineamen arises From the Greate quantity of Negros sold at Jamaica this last year and that in Order to keep up the price The marchants now are Obliged to give a Long Credit to Planters.

When you have fixt'd with the house for Sales of your Slaves it then requires no Consideration What Voyge you are to take Next. As the New York Packet lately arrived has brought us a Confirmatison of the Resolves of the Congress at Philadelphia which is a non importatison is to Take place immediately,[2] which not only Excludes all manner of Good from England and Ireland But molasses or Surrups from any of the West Indee Island. This intirely flustrate any Further rum Cargoes from America at present Except that article would do to be carried directly from Jamaica to the Coast but that you are Better able to Judge of. But in that case 240 Galls rum at 2/4 d. Jamaica Currancy per Galln With punchins would stand in about 22 Sterling Which is more than given in Goods for a Slave, the Above news you must of heard before you left the Coast.

You are tharefore to take in on Account of your Cargo abt 50 Hhds of Sugars and 30 or 40 punch. rum And as much Frieght to fill your Vessell with as you Can git which the house that sells your Slaves is to Assist you with and to come home to London as soon as possible and be purticular that the sugars you take for our Acct: is good Colourd and well Cured and rum strong proof and well flavourd And let every 10 punchn. be under Diff't Marks for Convaniances of Sales hear Say B T: F F P C etc.

Upon your arrival hear if you should have any Encouragement for a Good Cargo we Can soon fit you out with one for the Coast as most Part of the Guinia goods heare are at 12 months Credit and some longer. And the produce which You may Bring on sure account will be sold to raise Cash for the outfitts, I find the Gold Coast goods men have dun very wel Lately and I make no doubt with assistance of a good Mate to be got hear that has bin Used to the trade You will be Able to make out a Small Cargo as Well as Others. As matters now stand you see there is no other way left, if you mean to make another Voyage to Africa in the Thames, which I much wish you to do rather than Dispose of the Vessell which must be the Case on her arrival hear if you do not make another trip in her.

You will take Care to forward the 1 and two setts of Bills of Exchange for Neat proceeds of you Cargo By difft Vessells whome you leaves the Island before you wch inclose to me at Peter Hodgson As usuall that the same may be comeing round.

If Mr. Hibberts house should not agree to take you up to which I hope will not be the Case you are Next to call upon Mr. Ewd Ford whome may have alterd his mind and make him an Offer to sell your Cargo which if he refuses then you are to Put your Slaves in the hands of Peatts and Westmorland to do the Best they can for. Jos: Peatt is come home Sickly and John Peatt of Hull is going out immedeatly again to Jamaica and I have no doubt he would sell a Cargo at as high a price as any Body and take as much pains But wants a good bank hear. He indeed has apply'd for Sale of the Thames' Cargo which I told him I Could not promise that as I had Engaged the preference to a house Guaranteed to me hear And I immagaind they would have enough to with the Fletcher's Cargo to get her Dispatched And make good remitances hear in due time.

[December 22, 1774.]

Sir, . . . That our Concern in the Thames was large And a Deal depended upon a certainty of the Bills Being paid whin they [246] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76. The earlier paragraphs of this letter duplicate the substance of the first one. Here Fletcher is continuing the answer he made to John Peatt.

Come home as both you And my self had straind a point to Carry it through. However if you should be Obleg'd To get Mr. Peatt's house to do this Business I should prefer Selling at Leward either Savanlimeer or Lewsea,[2] where you have the greatest chance Of a higher price for the Slaves as well as produce Cheaper Then in Kingstown. And they must be very Cautious Whose Bills they take to remitt me on that account as such numbers of Bills go Back protested dayly And youle Observe the same both in regard to Quantity and Quality of produce as if Hibberts house had done The Business but youle further Observe with Peatts house onely that the planters long sightd Bills taken in payment are to bear Intrust at 60 or 90 days after sight which must be Specifide in the Bill. I mentison this as you may not be Acquainted with the Custom. Whare no Bond is Given for the negros its But right the owners should have that benifit for all risques, But you are not to require this of Mr. Hibberts house as all thair Bills are Guaranteed and no fear of thair returning. And I would have Peatts people to remit Bills for the whole Ballance of Net proceeds, if possible to make an end of the Voyage, Even if you take a Little more Sugars—not rum—And thair Own Bills on Arthur Peatt of London On different periods of being due at as short time as you Can get and as little to Exceed 12 month With them as possible. And I hope they will exert Them selves on the Occasion if they Expect anoth[er] Guinea man from us. When I mentisond in regard to the Intrust on the Long Bills you are to get Allown if you can Haveing wrote you so Fully as above you cannot be at a Loss how to act both as to Selling your Slaves and future Voyage and Cannot say more on the Occasion but Leave the rest to your own prudent Management for our mutual Benefit.[3] . . .

London 24th Decem: 1774.

Dear Sir, Inclosed you have a Long letter in which I have been as full as I can in regard to Jamaica. And in Order to give you as

[2] Savanna la Mar or Lucea. Both are in the western part of Jamaica.

[3] Endorsed: "Received the 12th April 1775 at St. Lewsea Jamaica." On Jan. 12, 1775, Fletcher repeated much of the matter of these letters in two others, adding: "I desire you will Also reserve a likely man Boy out of your Cargo and git him sent to Mr. Wm. Clarke of St. Elizabeths for my Edw. in the same manner you did Last Voyage as the one sent Turn out very well, which charge me with as will settle for him whin you come home" (Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76). These letters are endorsed: "Receiv'd the 2th April 1775 at St. Lewsia Jamaica." The reason for the two letters on each of the above dates seems clear: one was to be shown to the West India houses to which Clarke was to go, the other, intended for the captain's eye alone, contained more specific details as to terms, the standing of the firms, the relative advantages or disadvantages of the various houses mentioned, and the caution that might be necessary in some cases.

[247] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76. This was probably in the nature of a postscript to the letters of Dec. 22, and sent with them.

many Chances as possible of a market for your Slaves—if they should Bear any price at Barbados, which is sildum the Case, I have taken a Guarantee from Allen Master[Marlin?] and Co: for thair friends House Jones and Ewing of Barba's: As well as for Thompson and Hunter at St. Kitts. And if Jones and Ewing will Engage to sell your Cargo and Average 40£ 10 s. Sterling round and give Bills at 4, 8 and 12 months, longer time you Have liberty to sell thair if you approve of it but Not otherwise. I have likewise taken another guarantee from Wm. Snell and Co. for thair friends Houses, viz. Robt. Cunningham and Jos. Tatham of St. Vincents and Thulfall and Anderson at Granado. Therefore if you should not succeed at Barbados it is But calling at those Island and not much out of your way to Jamaica.

And if either those houses will take you up and engage To average your Cargo 41£ Ster'g round, Bills 9, 12, 15 and 18 Months which linth I understand they have got thare, But what ever is Custumery on your arrival thare, You have Liberty to sell thare on those terms, But not otherwise. And take the same quantity of Sugars on Account of the Cargo thare as limited at Jamaica But windward Island rum on Our account, and the house that sells your Slaves to Assist you with Some Freight to London. But if you should not succeed at Either of those Islands and Could with conveniance fetch St Kitts Without loosing much time you may try thare and Make the same Offer to Thompson and Hunter to take 41 Ster'g Avarage. But if you do not Meat with success thare, then you are to make the Best of your way down to Jamaica as before Orderd. I think if your negros are helthy And a tolarable likely Cargo thare will not be the least doubt of thare Avarag 42£ Ster'g at Jamaica Whare small slaves and even Mangie Ones sells better than in any other Island. The only advantage of selling at Windward is saving som time on the Bills as well As ships provisions and portage Bill etc., By being home With me sooner in London. But all this I leave To your owne Consideratison discretison and we must Not make too large allowances for that.

When you come to any of thre[these] Island you must Lay off and on, and send your mate on shore to those Gentlemen mentisond who will come on board and give thair answer. But do not by any means go Out of the Ship your Self. In case of selling at Barbados your not to take any Shugars on oure own Account of the Cargo, as at those Other Islands But to make the best of your way home to me with the Bills, Incloseing the Other Letter by two difft Ships That Sails first, And the Bills at Short sight Must answer the End of produce, when you come Heare if we should fit out again immediately But if the house can help you with a little freight will be better than Comeing in Ballace which you are not to waite for.[2]

248. John Fletcher to Captain Peleg Clarke, 1774.[1]

I have duly Considerd the diffecence betwixt Selling at Windward Islands and Jamaica which you can Judge of your self. I think the average I have fixd on at those Islands is near the matter and would not have you Abate, Except at Barbados the Odds 10/ per head and that in Consideratison the Bills are given at 4, 8 and 12 Months or Shorter Sight if you Can, as 6 months Intrist on each Bill is Equal to 20/ per head on each Neagro. And 41£ Sterg at Granada and Co is not Equal to 42£ Sterg at Jamaica as the Bills are Now much the same linth at time—only as I have said a Little time saved in your being Earlyer with Me. And in case of a Bargin you can come with in 10/ per head of the 41£ sterg at those Islands and you shall think well of it I shall not tye you Down but leave that tō your self—for dispatch Sake but I would not have you abate Otherwise.

Cape Coast Castle January 5th 1775.

Sir, I have perused your last Letter to Governor Mill, and am sorry to acquaint you that the sudden death of the Register of this Castle has absolutely prevented any remittance being made to you (by Captain Clark) of what is due to your Son Edward Wanton, by the Estate of the late Thomas Drew, untill the affairs of the defunct Register are examined and settled, then your request shall be punctually complied with and the dividend remitted to you, in the meantime I entreat your patience.[2] . . .

Newport March 8 1775.

Gent'n, We now acknowledge the favr. of Captain Benjamin Wright of your house Decr. 1st 1774 and January 18 1775. in Consequence We are this day forwarding Orders to Capt'n Champlin,[2]

[2] Committee of Correspondence of Newport, R. I., to the Philadelphia Committee. "Newport, January 5, 1775. Gentlemen: Being informed that it is reported at New-York and at other parts of the Continent, that the inhabitants of this Town are fitting out vessels and determined to carry on their trade in violation of the Continental Association; and as the propagators of this infamous falsehood can have no other intention than to weaken the bands of union between the Colonies, we think it our duty to acquaint you, that several vessels designed for the coast of Africa, which could not be got ready by the first of December, have been actually laid up . . . . and that so far as we can learn, the Association hath been strictly adhered to by the Merchants in this Colony, who declare their intention to abide by it." [251] [1] Champlin Letter-Book, no. 135.

[2] On Feb. 20, 1775, the Champlins wrote to Messrs. Samuel and James King Went, successors to Stevenson and Went, enclosing directions to Captain Champlin meant to supersede those of Nov. 21, 1774 (ante, no. 243). If he found letters with the Wents from Threlfal and Anderson assuring him of £40 he was to go at once to Grenada. If not, he was to offer the cargo to Messrs. Went for £38, half cash, half bills on London, at 8 months' sight, or if necessary, all bills. If the Wents refused these terms he was to proceed to the Grenadas and there make the best possible bargain with Threlfal and Anderson. If they would not agree to an average price near £37 and his slaves were "in heath," he might next try Thomas and Eliphalet Fitch of Kingston, Jamaica, from whom he was to accept bills on Nathaniel Marston and his son Thomas, New York merchants, exchange dollar for dollar. If possible the vessel was to be sold; if not, and no desirable freight could be obtained, he was to return in ballast. If however he should find letters at Barbados from Threlfal and Anderson, telling him not to come to the Grenadas, he might then accept £36 at 8 months' sight from Messrs. Went. If they refused to give that he might then try Fitch at Kingston, then Murray and Wright at Savanna la Mar. On Mar. 8, under a covering letter to Messrs. Went, a third set with our Limits to Windward, if he cannot obtain them, to proceed to your address, upon the terms you propose to sell our Cargo of Slaves at, by which Method the Sales must be greatly advanced in our fav. If Bills could be sent us at 12 Mo. Sight for the Nt. amt. it would be more agreeable, provided they would be accepted in London when demanded; but if not to be complied with without injuring the Sale greatly We must then be content with having the bills remitted to us at the periods you fix, which we conclude will be in Bills of 30 or 40 days Sight, otherwise sell here at a Disct. by our original Orders Capt Champlin was to call upon Messrs. Fitches at Kingstown. We are now countermanding them, to proceed direct to you, If possible sell our Sloop for us, or get a Freight to NYork or Philadelphia. We flatter ourselves you will render us a sale equal to Mr. Lopez' Cargo. not a single Guineaman has left the Continent since 1st Decr. In Confidence you will promote our interest in this Sale

Montegobay 17th March 1775.

Dear Sir: By this I acquaint you of Safe arival At the above place, after a passage of 68 Day's and am Sorry to aquaint you I am but in a very poor State of Helth such a one as I am afraid will put me a[t] one Side for a Long time if not for ever. I arrived hear four Day's ago and to my great Disapointment found no Letters from you as you wrote me you would Leave for me At the Hous of Mounteger and Barnard, but agreeable To your Order in yours of the 30 July 1774 which reced Under Cover to Mr. Mill at Cape Coast 2 Day's before I left it, I Made applicatison to those gentlemen And they wound not at any rate or terms take me up. I then Next made applicatison to Mr. Clarke and [he] refused Likewise and said it was out of his power to take Hur if he Could pay in Bills at 3 years, And likewise had received no advise about such a Vessel. I then of instructions was sent to the Adventure. If on Captain Champlin's arrival at Barbados he found no letter from Messrs. Threlfal and Anderson, he was to offer his cargo to the Wents, accepting £35 if necessary. If they would not assure that price he was then to try the Grenadas, where he was to receive £36 or sail for Savannah la Mar, where he was to offer his cargo to Murray and Wright. On Mar. 21 the Newport firm wrote to Captain Champlin that they had just learned that 1600 slaves had been sold in the Grenadas in December and January and that 2000 had gone to Leeward. Because of this news the captain was directed to accept £34 from the Wents rather than quit Barbados (Champlin Letter-Book, no. 135). The Letter-Book also contains a letter dated Mar. 23, 1774, which probably belongs to 1775. At the time of writing the house had received news that Joseph and Eliphalet Fitch had sold De Wolf's cargo at a price averaging £42. 10 (post, no. 258), and Captain Champlin was directed to disregard previous orders and, if he could not obtain £35 from Went and Son or £37 from Threlfal and Anderson, to proceed at once to Kingston and place his cargo in the hands of the Fitches.

[252] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76. It is to be remembered that when Captain Clarke wrote the following letter he had received none of Fletcher's numerous directions.

Offerd my Slaves to Mr. Jackson and Co a house hear which would not take her nither after to Mr. Moger but thair is not one in this place would Or could take me up. Not even Bills at that Monstrous price of 12, 18 and 20 Mont. From the foregoing I would not have you think I have Brought off a bad Cargo of Neagroes For I assure you not, for it is alowed by Mr. Clarke Who is thought to be a good Judge of Slaves and Sells as many As any hous in the Island, Sayes they are five pound Better than any gould Coast Cargo that ever he saw. And had it not bin for my freight Slaves I Should have gone to Kingston from a paragraft of your's Of the 30 July, at before menchond for as Mr. Clarke And the Other Gentlemen that has Seen them Say, they never Saw so many Cromitins [Cormantines] as now on Board Her, And I am sure I never Brought of so many nor in so good Order. I come now to tell you what I have Done with them. I have this Day agreed to put them into the Hand of Malcum and Nevinson Marchts at St. Lewsea, Malcum you know was at Rhode Island with you, Upon such tirmes as wass given by several Vessels now in port and tirable, they are Viz 12, 18 and 20 month, Intrust on the 2 Last Bills after 12 mounths, which Will Bring my ninepence to nothing and will not releave you. However my state of helth is such And the times so bad from the Large quantity of Negros being Brought hear that this is the only And all the Chance I have to make any Tolarable Dispatch or in fact git rid of them at all, And they are very Expencive and provisions scarce and Dear. to-morrow I shall [go] with the Brig [to?] Lewsea and our Sails will be Appointed that Day weak and am to be Dispatched in 6 Days after the Sailes is Compleated. whare to go and What to do After, I am sure I Cannot tell, as it is Impossible to git a fright hear or at Lewsea or I believe in any Part of the Island for Mr. Malcom and likewise Clark and Barnard all says that not to flatter me with Hopes for it is not to be done. Nither is thair Money to be got Hardly to pay Disbustments it is as bad hear as was at Barbados on that Account.

I Obsarve in yours of 30 July you take notis the Fletcher is more Expencive in Cargo and Outfitts than before. I beleave when you Deduct the Loss on Her Voige for Molasses you will find her very little More, her provisions was Cheaper and not one farthing was laid out on her but what was Necessary and the Schooner likewise. I had her to Sheath which is Expenceive. I am Confident I took every prodent method that I was Capable of but the Expences would and did Arise, as you Obsarved that Expences would arise At Hull as well as London and now I may say, at Rhode Island as well thair But that you have Experinct'd before. All I can say I am Clear as to myself of laying one farthing that I Could avoid in fiting out any of the Vessels.

I have not the happiness of knowing how you find the Thames Account and disbustments but I hope Satisfactory not with Standing they are so much higher than Expected When we Left London. I am hartily sorry if it has put you to any Inconvence that will prove Disagreeable to you, but we was Imbarcht and Could not go back, Thairfore I pushed on with all my power for to Compleat it. notwith Standing Every thing that has Before past I am now the Mist [Least ?] pleast with what I have don this Day than with any Ac'tt of past Conduct, throughout my hole Trancactisons since I left you for it is Damnable to have Suit Bills. I have heard nothing about the Fletcher but hope you have the Bills are [ere] this for our part, and likewise for the 15 Slaves sent in her on the Thames Acct. I Brougt Off the Coast 100 Slave Freight for Mr. Bell at £5 Sterling per head and have Deliverd them all in good Order, have Lost on our Voyage 7 Slaves Otherways and Excepting one or two more have a Cargo of picturs, And as Mr. Clarke Observes Cannot help making grate Avarage. I was taken sick about a month Before I left the Coast down to leward Collecting my slaves and have never got the better of it yet and Wheather ever I shall or no I Cannot tell.

How about Comeing home to you in the Brig I do not know What to say but if I gro better I will but shall [be] intirely Directed by My helth and the Advise of the Docters for at present I can hardly keep an hour of the Bed At a time. And have been much Oblig'd to Capt. Anderson in a Ship belonging to Mr. Morstons House whome is bin about for me and likewise Mr. Clarke whom Has kindly Assisted me in makeing the Contract. So bad as it is it wass very hard to make, Esspechly in my bad State of helth, for the planters are so Much in Debt from the grate quanty of Neagros that has bin imported that the Guine Factors Do not incline to take up Guinamen at any rate indevour to git out as fast as pasable and will take none but what thair friends Contracts for in England and of which they have advise and are Desired by thair friends to sell, so you may see what tarible times we have fell in with. We have Brought in for Cargo 188 Slaves for Schooner and Cargo and Brigs Cargo. from Illness I have not settled the Acct: yet but hope to be able before the Vessel Leaves this wheather I come in her Or not to London, Which I should be very Sorry if I cannot. Thair is about 20 slaves more freight that I Brought, Belongin to Several persons, which will make the Freight amount to about 600 £ Sterling which had it not have bin for these Crewel times Might have Maid a saving Voige. Capt: Thurston the Schooner Nancy Captn. is sick Likewise and some of my people So that I never had such a Sickly ship before Among My officers and Saylors tho I have lost none But two of the Schooners is ded. as thair will be Oppertunityes now of writing I ad no more. . . .

253. Agreement on the Cargo of the Thames, 1775.[1]

Agreement between Messrs. Malcolm and Nevison and Peleg Clarke Commander of the Brigantine "Thames."

1st That they Malcolm and Nevinson do as soon as dispose of the Cargo of Negros on board Said Vessell to the best advantage and that they (M and N) do remitt the Neat proceeds of Said Cargo of Negros after Deducting Charges in good bills of Exchange at the following rates and vizt One third of the Amo't of Said Cargo in Bills at Twelf Months Sight One third in Bills at Eighteen Months Sight, and one third in bills Twenty four Months Sight and also they (M and N) do agree to allow Interest to Commence on the Two Last bills meaning 18 and 24 Months Bills after 12 Months Sight

2d that they Malcolm and Nevinson do pay to the Said Peleg Clarke Commander of Said Brig Thames the Amount of Six negroes to be on the Average of the Cargo as previledge and also his Coast Commission in the following manner Viz To give him the Said Peleg Clarke A bill of Exchange for one Hundred and Fifty Pounds Sterling at Ninty days Sight and for the remainder amount of Said Six negroes and Coast Commishions to give him a bill of Exchange at Twelve Months allowing Interest to Comme[nce] on Said Bill at Six Months after Sight, And [as] the Said Peleg Clarke hath fourteen more negroes a remaining part of his Privilidge and seven Negroes upon freight making in all twenty one They (M and N) do agree to give the Said Peleg Clarke Bills of Exchange for amount of Said Twenty one Negroes to be on the Average of the Cargo at the Same rates as Cargo Bills are to be at Viz one Third of the Nett Proceeds of Said Twenty one Negroes in bills at Twelve months Sight one Third At Eighteen months Sight and one Third in bills at Twenty-four Months Sight, And to allow Interest on said Bills (in the Like manner as they do the Cargo) to Commence after Twelve months Sight, and they the Said Malcolm and Nevinson do further Agree That the Said Brigantine Thames Shall not be Detaind above Six dayes after the Sale of her Cargo of Negroes, is Compleated but that they will Dispatch the Said Capt. 254 Peatt and Westmorland to Captain Peleg Clarke, 1775.[1]

Kingston Apriel 1st, 1775.

Dear Sir, We recived Yours by Yesterdays Post from Lewsea and are Exetreemely Sorry that continud so much Indisposed. god Send a Speedy Change for the better. we wrote you by our Clark Mr. Austin about Six days ago mentioning that Fletchers Orders had come to Mr. Hibberts House dereccting you to Sell with them at Montegu bay. no doubt long 'ere this, you have recid these Instructions and Seen Mr: Bernard relative the Disposing of your Cargoe.[2]

Such long and Tedious detentions must Occation you great Uneasiness, and be rather Dessagreeable to Malcolm and Nevison after Consenting to rest with them. The Guinaman Sold at Kingston lately have been taken up at 12, 15 and 21 Months, Except those Sold to the Contractors for Dollers, and they give no more then 36 £ Ster'g per head for prime men Slaves so that none of the Cargoes Sold to them Average more than about £34 Ste'g which is amaterial difference indeed. Gould Coast Cargos Sold for the Islands Consumption, open on the day of Sail at £66 and Duty and Priviledge £70. we mention'd in our last that poor Stockford departed this life last Sunday after lingering in a deliurous Setuation for Six days. he left in our hands about 400£ Four Hundred pounds this Currency as per Acco't Settled with him before he wass taken with a Relapse, likewise Close, watch, Buckles, buttons and etc. Pray give us your advice what to do with his Effects. Mr. Hill the Chief Mate went home Master and Sail'd from Port Royal the 24 Int: bound for London, after waiting Upwards of Six days in hopes of a change in Stockford favor but alass it proved in Vain. we Ship'd Eighty Cask Sugar and Rum on the Oners Accot: agreeable to Mr. Fletchers Orders, and procured Indigo and other Light Frieght within twenty or twenty five Cask of a full Loade. For the Balance of This Cargo we Sent Bills at Six and twelf Months Sight, and closed the Voyage with Yours and all the Oners different Accounts, which

[2] Clarke had asked that his terms might be those afforded to a Captain Mill then in the harbor: "bills at 9: 12: 15 and 18 Mo'ths with Intrest after 12 Mo. on the two Last Bills. A fair Sale to be made without picking any Slaves before the day of sale, my Privilege to be paid in Bills at 3 and 6 Mo'ths Sight, the Officers at 90 days or in produce." Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

[254] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

[2] The letter of Mar. 26 to which Peatt and Westmorland refer was written as soon as they received news of Clarke's arrival but it reached him on Apr. 4, after he had made his bargain with Messrs. Malcolm and Nevinson. The information contained in this letter was given in that one also.

were transmitted to Mr. Fletcher. The Slaves Averag'd £40.17.11 Ste'g The 14 had from Brew was ameans of Reduceing Avarage inconcievably, as they turnd out mere Rubbish. Stockford onely Lost on[e] Slave in all.[3] . . .

255. Captain Robert Champlin to Christopher Champlin, 1775.[1]

April 2, 1775.

This lines will Forward by Capt Mowet. I rote by Capt. Stanton. I have on board at this time 20 Slaves and have lent 6 more to mr. woortman a Dutch Governor. I sold 30 Hoghh. of Rum To one Mr. Riches and that is all the Rum I have Sold to the whits But Could pllace My Carg any time If I would give 210 and 190 But I think To Stand It out sumthing longer[2] I Have Sold 20 Hogh to the Blacks most of which I have Good Sumes for and if times Dont alter I dont dought in the Least But I shall get of most of my Rum that way in three munths. that slaves that I get of the Blacks Stands me in 160 sum more and sum less. I cannot Pertend to say what Time I Shall Get off For trad Is very on Stidy, Sum Days I Get 2 or three slaves and then for a Weake not see one. Gardnier is sold all His Rum at 200 and 210 So Remington and me Has Got the Roade to our selves, But I dont no How long we Shall Remain so For Dunking[3] Came to the mines yesterday, we Look for Dewoulfe Here Every moment. I believe Capt Dunkin Dont Entend to Come Down Here and I am in Hopes that He will come of that mind For two is Full a nuf to Trade with Blacks and the Costoms is so Hie that I Dont think He will Pay them. I have on Board at this time 80 Hoghead of Rum and sum small Casks. Mr. Bell Did not take the Casks for He is a going of the Coast in two or three weakes. . . . Capt. Bardine Sails in two or three Days I shall Rite By Him I had the misfortune to Get the Measels amung my slaves lost one Boy with it and Have a nother of my won that is very bad, all the rest hef Got Well. I have Had No Leakage only Nathan millers Hogshead leake all out to 45 Gallons the three Bottom Staves Broke in tirely off.

St Lewsea April 7th 1775.

Dear Sir, Haveing but Short notice of Capt. Mill Sailing I take this Oppertunity of Aquainting you that this Instant the Gentleman Compleeted the Sail of the Negros and our Avrage will be about 45£ Ste'g not farr Under or Over. They call it grate here, I think it but Middleing concidering the Quality of the Slaves. your Orders for Barbados and Jamaica came to hand the 2n Instant by the post but Unhappily two late for our Sale came on the 3r Otheways I belive Mr. Barnard and Co. would have taken me up by what I can larn from Messrs. Peatts and Westmorland but have not heard from them and am Sorry they had not been more timely as I Candidly belive it would have been for the Advantage of our Voyage.[2]

I have Comunicated to Malcolm and Nevison your Orders about taken Some produce; they have not given me Any Answer weather they will Comply with it or not, as we made no Agreement for Any part to be paid in produce and am rather Apt to Think they will not give any as for Fright I cannot git a Cask altho I have Offerd to take in at 3/6 P.C. there is Somany Ships here that Some of the Annual Ships will go home not full. . . .

Gent'n, Your fav. 14 Feby. we have recd. noting the average of Col Potters Slaves at £42.10 Stg. We have forwarded our Orders to Barbadoes, for Capt'n Robert Champlin, of our Sloop Adventure, to proceed to your Address, if cannot obtain our Limits, infull Confidence you will promote our Sale equal to any other, Quantity may not exceed 90, a higher average may be produced than from a large Cargo. We have directed Capt'n Champlin to take your bills on Mess. Marston and Son Thomas, in Conformity to their Letter lodged in the hands of Messrs. Joseph and William Wanton of this Town, for the Nett Am't of his Cargo at 6 or 9 Mo Sight, you furnishing as much Money as his Port Charges, and for Payment of such Seamen as may want their Wages, Assist the Capt'n in the Sale of the Sloop, if possible, as we cannot fit any more to Africa 'till our Troubles are settled, giving all dispatch in your power, and advising us of your Market.[2]

Montego Bay August 8th 1775.

Sirs, We now enclose you Account of Sales of the Othello's Cargoe of Negroes Amount Neat £2462.8.2 Jam: Currency to yr Credit in Accompt Current.[2] There is at foot of said Sales an additional Sale of 12 Neg's the Capt. had on freight and 5 his own privelege, the Average tho rather small is greater than we had a right to expect from the Indifferency of the Cargoe and which coming at a very unseasonable time near the middle of July was too late for us to expect any payment this Crop. And as a further damper to our Endeavours a large Gold Coast ship with 280 very choice Slaves arrived at this port 4 days after Yours, what few Bill of Exchange men there were they picked up, but for the farr greater part they have given the usual Credit as well as us.

Your payments will be in the Month of May next, and in the Month of May 1777 and we flatter Ourselves there is not a Negroe sold but what will be paid for. It gives us much Concern that nothing eligible has offerd for the Venus, had you not limitted us to selling her or loading her for London or New York we might have served you by loading her for Bristol, which there is now a pretty tolerable chance of doing had you been pleased to have favoured Us with a discretionary power we certainly should have used it to the best of our Judgement for your Interest, but nothing favourable offering compatible with your Instructions you must expect to see her soon in Rhode Island, and we are sorry to say an Empty Vessel.

[P.S.] We also enclose your Acco't Current ballance due you when the debts are received two thousand two hundred and sixty two pounds 15/11 Currency.

P.S. to Guard as much as possible against any disaster attending the Vessel in Case Government shoud think proper to make Reprisals Capt. Sweet has alterd his Regis'r and made a nominal Sale to Us. The Expence attending it is but trifling in Comparison to the use it may be of, if matters are drove to the Such Extrimities that appear unavoidable.[3]

260. Christopher Champlin to Captain Robert Champlin, 1775.[1]

Newport 17 Aug. 1775.

Capt. Robert Champlin, Of [y]our letters from Anambo 2d and 14 April We recd. and flatter our selves you are at least a month on your Passage to the Islands. As Slaves are low to Windward have no expectation of your selling there for our Limits and of course will proceed to Mesrs. Fitches of Kings Town Jamaica, who from their letters to us have agreed to sell your Cargo and give bills on NYork. Our particular Instructions to you has been heretofore lodged with them; we can only ad that nothing but Wars is here, and orders may soon come to the men of Wars to seize all Vessells without Distinction, being 3, of 20 Guns here, besides cutters and Press all they can. If there is a Possibility of selling the Sloop do it at all events—nay even take £100 Sterling for her rather than bring her home, tho I think £200 might be obtained for, but if you are obliged to bring her home, head up all your Swords and other arms in a Tight hhd. and Stow in a Tear among your hhds. of Water for Ballast or the man Wars will take them from you lay out no money on your Sloop. Tuckers must not be paid his Wages, Dick Lamb I have for him to Jack Scott £64 old Tenor or 8 dollars to be Stoped from his Wages. Make all the Dispatch home you can wishing you Success.[2] is interesting as indicating the writer's implicit belief that once the war was over the slave trade would be resumed: "We may perhaps derive a benefit from the Spaniards opening their Port of New Orleans provided they admit the Sale of Negros, which will promote the Guinea Trade, from these States, that labours under the prohibition of bringing Negro's into the United States." Fletcher's instructions for this voyage were dated Oct. 19, 1775, about which time Clarke again sailed for the coast, with a cargo valued at £6129 11 s. 2 d., with which he was instructed to procure 300 slaves, to be sold by Malcolm and Nevinson or Hibbert, Bernard, and Montague. On Jan. 2 Clarke wrote from Sekundi of his difficulties on the coast. He had at that time obtained 10 slaves and 20 oz. of gold. Ibid.

make the best of your way for Montegoe Bay in the Island of Jamaica, without calling at Any Other Island, And on your Arrival there give Mr. Hibberts House (say Barnard and Montague) the preferance of Selling your Slaves, And wt whom you will Make the best terms you can. as to the length of the Bills, You Must be governed by what is Customary when you Arrive there, And I make no doubt from what I have wrote Messrs. Hibberts but they will take you up, if not you are next to Apply to Messrs Malcolm and Nevinson of Lucie,[2] to do the Bussiness as before, but to observe that either of those Houses that may Sell your Negroes must give you at least 100 Punch's Rum in part payment of Neat proceeds of Sales and to Assist you with a Freight to fill your Vessel up if possible for London and Bristol, But reither the former. But in case of those Houses declineing to do this Business, You are then to Dispatch your Doctor or one of the Mates, Express to Kingston to Messrs. Peatt and Westmorland, And get one of them to come down immediately to sell your Slaves, which no doubt they will readily comply with, And do the best for you they can, and procure you the Above Produce, as well as a Freight for the Vessel to London, And their Bills on Our Friend Arthur [3] I make no doubt will be Honoired, but to take none of the Planters Bills by Any Means, Such is the difficualtys of the times at presant that no body will Engage here or give a Guarantee, however I am in hopes that either One or Other of the before Mentioned Houses do your Bussiness, without your being oblidged to Send to Kingston, And Only Mention that in case of need, that you may not be at any loss how to Act, As youle Observe I give the preferance to Peatts People of Any the Other Houses at Montego Bay, who I know nothing of.

I Shall be glad to hear by first Opp'ty how your Brandy turns out, I hope it will prove a Commanding Article to forward your purchase. The Fletcher remains as before, not Sold, what think you of Sending her with a Cargo of Brandy Only to the Coast.

As to News Must refer you to the Bearer of this, in regard to America their Seems No likelyhood of coming to Any Accomodation at presant, the late act of Parliment pass'd will Stop up all their Ports, And Men of Warr to take All their Shiping will put a finishing Stroke to poor America, A great Navy and Army going Over in the Spring, they must submit I think at last, tho' I fear Not with out Annamaboe, Feby. 8th 1776.

Pr. the Whym Capt. Butler

D'r Sir, In my last from Seccondie Pr. the Friendship C't Dunn, I gave you a Small Scetch of the times here, which I am Sorry to inform you are full as bad or worse than represented. before my Arrival in the roade, I call'd at all the Castles in my way down, but could make little or no trade, they all being engaged or full of goods which at presant is a Drug all over this part of the Coast. I before Acquainted you to what a disadvantage we disposed of goods for gold, and without which there is no such thing as geting a Slave, Sute Romall 1½ Accey, Yellow Ells 3 and 3½ Do., Ancors of Brandy 3½ and 4 Do., Deans Guns 2 and 2½ Do., Tallow I Do., Bejutapotts and Nijanapouts 3½ Do., Barragore romalls 2 Do. and indeed every thing else we Sell in order to raise gold are oblidged to Sell at the like discount, Callawaypours, Allejarrs, Sestracoundy romalls and blew Ells they will not take on a Slave, Stripe Taffity and Cottonnee I am oblidged to buy as they term it, and give 12 Ackys Gold, (wch goes for 1 oz. Trade) Notwithstanding I have Stripe Taffitys I can't get them to take one, English Chints that before was the Commanding Article is now Nothing they hardly will take a piece on a Slave, India Chints they will not look at, In order to Acquaint you as fully as possible of the Manner of Trade I send you Account of the goods I trusted for a Man Slave this day,

Amount to 11 oz Trade, this is the black trade, and the White trade is 12 oz,[2] in Short by what I can find out By all the Captains here there Slaves Stands them in 24£ Ster'g and upwards round. The Vessels now here are the Swallow Nelson her purchase Compleeted, will Sail in a Short time, Marquis of Rockingham, Charles, wants 90 Slaves, the Britania Hughes has About 50 Slaves, Juno, Eagles just arr'd, (all of L'ple [Liverpool]), The Unanimity Chambers wants 40, The Peggy Martin, about 20, on board, Sophia Bold taken up by Mill and Miles (all of London), The Phenix Taylor wants About 80, The Tom Nicholson wants 50, The King George Williams Contracted wt the Whites for all his Cargo, (all of Bristol,). There is Several Vessels to windward Among Whom C't Farrar from Liverpool who we heere has 1700 Brass pans and 1000 Shantee romauls, if so will when he arrives carry all the Trade for without a Shantee Romal and 4 Brass pans you cannot think of purchasing a Slave. Since my Arrival have done but little, raised about 70 oz. gold and have made barters with the Whites about 50 Slaves and if Mr. Mill Complies with his promise have 20 More from him, but as he is a realiseing and intends Coming off many Obstacles may Arrise that he Cannot Comply. As to the black trade I have purchased two Women and trusted About 8 Slaves goods which is the Whole of the bussiness Since I came down in the roade, being Selling a little Brandy for Gold, which by no means is liked equal to our rum, A few days ago arrived here a Small Vessel from the Granads with about 6000 Gs. rum, was taken up by Mill, Miles and Brew, at 140 and 160 Gs. per Slave.

[2] These prices should be compared with those prevailing about fifty years earlier. See this work, II. 372-383.

A few days ago Capt. Hill returned from to windward very Sick, but are in hopes is Something better now. My Cooper came out with a Pox on him and as yet the Doctor has not been Able to remove it, and for the want of him we are much distrest and in a little While Shall not have an Ancor to give on a Slave. And as one Misfortune does not come Alone, the 3d Instant our boatswain lost our 2d boat After landing 2 Punch'n Brandy at the Saltponds, lost in her 1 Empty Punch'n 1 do. Ancor and 1 Swivil Gun. Mr. Carr is to windward in the 1st Boat wth a Cargo of brandy, Goods etc. etc. after Gold. In my barter for 20 Slaves with Mr. Miles I gave him 40 oz Gold for 70 oz Trade, which is 10 oz. trade loss on the Stripe Taffity and Cottonnee. I endeavoured to let you know how matters are a going, and like to go, for there is no hopes of any alteration like to happen Soon for the better. . . .

20th Feby. 1776.

Per the Swallow C't Nelson

D'r Sir, Since the above I have not purchased a Slave by that you may See trade is Excessive dull, I have Sold a few Punch'ns of Brandy for Gold which is all the trade I have made, times never was duller than at presant, I have had Some trouble wt the Man of Warr on Acc't of my Register being part of the property of an American was detained one day and a night but delivered me again and returning on board from the Man a warr I unfortunately lost it over board and shall proceed to C. Coast tomorrow in order to protest and get a Certificate 'till I can get Another register which will Answer equal the Same with my other papers, and Save a great dale of trouble, as the Men of war has orders to take all property belonging to any American. They have Several Vessels now with them that they have Already taken that has come out of America, and are in pursuite of a New York Vessel that is in Gaboon river, wh I do Suppose they will take, Mr. Carr returned f'm to windward not well, but he is gone to leeward in the boat. . . .

264. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Fletcher, 1776.[1]

Annamaboe Roade, 8th April 1776.

Per the Marquis of Rockingham Capt. Charles and the Tom Capt. Nicholson

D'r Sir, My last was by Capt. Nelson in the Swallow, where I made you Acquainted wth the Dull times here, and likewise that I had lost my register, And that I Should go to Cape Coast and make a protest, The next Morning I went up and when I came there the Secretary said it was not in his Power to grant one that would be of Any Service and so Said the governor. At the Same time the Weasel Man A Warr Capt. Warren was there and he Seem'd to be very much exasperated against the Americans, and was determined to take All he found, from What I could learn from the Masters at Cape Coast he Examined the Vessels very Closely to See if there was Any American property. I was advised by Friends that it would be better to go out of Sight for a Week or 10 days 'till he pass'd, and the next day I run out of Sight a land and Stay'd 'till he pass'd, and before I could return to the roade Again the Pallas C't Cornwallace [2] Arrived, and as I had left the roade I thought proper not to come in Again untill he pass'd by. I then Staid on Shore and Sent Capt. Hill out in the Ship to Stay 2 Weeks and then return, Which he did, but the Man a Warr had been detained by having Some Palavers to Settle wth the Dutch forts, that the Ship was Oblidged to go off again and stay a week longer. She this day returned to the roade, and I am bound down to Accara to deliver the Deans Company [3] an hundred or 150 Slaves goods, which I agread for Whilst the Ship was at Sea if the goods Suted. The Weasel I Saw returned on the Coast whilst I was at Accra last, About 5 days ago, and the Attalanta is likewise to come back, Whether to Stay on the Coast or not is not known, So that I am determined to get All the goods out of the Ship as Soon as possible, that they may have only an Empty Vessel to take if they are determined to bring of the Coast, which I am Affraid will be the Case, if the Weasel is to be Stationed here. It is a very unhappy Circumstance for Our Voyage, for it has keept me this 6 Weeks from Bussiness. However trade has been excessive dull and those in the roade All the time has not purchased 20 Slaves. If it was not for the longtime of payment wth the Deanish Company (which is to be the Middle of August) I Should think I have done more than if I had been in the roade, but I have been So harrased ever Since the Arrival of the Men of Warr that I am glad to get the goods out of the Vessel at Any rate, Esspecially where the payment has always proved good, if no farther Accts. of this Men A Warr Shall Set out in the Morning for Accara in the Ship. As I now have given you A full Account as I possibly can at presant, Must beg of you if Any thing can be done with you towards the preservation of the Intrest that you will do it. I don't think that any part of the Intrest is in danger of being Confiscated except my part, and that is because the Register Mentioned me belonging to Rhode Island, but to be brought off and leave the Cargo behind will be a great disapointment to you, which is the greatest part of my uneasiness at presant. I hope to return in time to give you farther Accounts of our Barter to leeward by the Companys Ship. After Setling of that barter can give some near gues of our purchase, which I am Affraid will be far Short of What was expected when I left you, for the price is now 10 and 12 oz to the Whites for Women and Men, and do not imagine I Shall be at Barbadoes till Novr.

I imagine you Will have time enough to Send Any Orders there that may be of Service to me After the receipt of this and I Sincerely hope the Affairs of America will be Settled. . . .

265. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Fletcher, 1776.[1]

Cape Coast Roade, 6th May 1776.

Per the Sophia C't Bold

Sir, In my last per the Rockingham Capt. Charles of the 1st Ult. I acquainted you I was about to barter with the Deans Company at Accra for 100 or 150 Slaves, provided the goods Suited, On the Ships return I proceeded with her to Accra and there Compleated the barter for 147 Slaves, which are to be All paid by agreemant by the Middle of August, And at the Same time delivered All the goods, I have now dissposed of All my Cargo Except 10 punch's of Brandy and the Jamaica Rum, great part of which I Shall want for Wooding, Watering and other expences, We are now Returned with out Ship to Cape Coast from Accra, in order to fill our Water, get our Wood and provisions, and to Collect our debts here and at Annamaboe, to Compleat which it will take 6 or 8 Weaks, When done here Shall return to Accra to be ready when our Slaves there becomes due,

By the nearest Calculation I can Make my purchase will amount to About 275 Slaves, but as my Stay on the Coast will be this Some time yet and of Course more Expencive I cannot justly Assertain the number, but it will be near what I before Mentioned.

The purchase Runs Short of Expectation when Sail'g but the prices is Much More than I expected when I left you, for All the Slaves is at 12 oz for Men and 10 oz for Women thats purchased from the Whites, and from my Unhappy Situation, and the Excessive dull trade I have made very little other trade than with the Whites, So that I labour under every disadvantage in point of profits to the Voyage,

[265] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

However I hope if we get Safe to Markett, with our Short purchase that we Shall not lose Money.[2] . . .

266. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Fletcher, 1776.[1]

Cape Coast Roade 6 July 1776.

D'r Sir, In my former letters Pr Capt'ns Bold, Smith and others, I fully informed you in what manner I had disposed of my Cargo, and time agree'd on for payment was the middle of Augt. And Expected to be at Barbadoes in Novr and I Should purchase About 275 Slaves. I now add that Trade has been entirely Stop'd for this 6 Weeks pass'd, Owing to the Chief of the people a going back against the Asshantees to Warr, and are not yet returned, but there is no likelyhoods of comeing to battle as the Asshantees is returned back to their Country again, and it is not likely their will be any great matter of trade for this some time again, (as the Chiefest of our trade comes through the Asshantees).

Everything Seems to contribute to our disapointment, About 3 weeks ago the Deans and Dutch Governors at Accra, and likewise their towns people, went together at Logerheads and fought for 3 or 4 days, from Which Accident has Stop'd all trade that way, and have just reason to think from that dissturbance it will put it out of the power of the Deans Governor to pay us agreable to contract, And am affraid shall not leave the Coast in all September, If so, cannot be at Jamaica 'till Decr.

Your favour Pr Constantine Capt. Robe of the 29th Jany. came to hand the 10th Ult. I observe your further orders about not Stoping to Windward, which Shall comply with, all my Letters before to you I have desired to have your orders at Barbadoes, and for fear you Should have Sent any there I have desired Messrs. Jones and Ewing if any letters Should be lodged with them for me, that they would forward them under cover to Messrs. Hibberts and Nephews at Kingston, and if the North side to Messers. Barnard and Montague, at Montego Bay, as I should not stop at Barbadoes. I shall agreable to your orders proceed immediately to Montego Bay, where I hope it will be agreable for the Former house to take me up, or our Former Friends, but Should I be oblidged to call on Our Friends, P and W. Shall Observe your note About the Planters Bills. [You] mentioned the Fletcher was still unsold, I wish we had been lucky enough to have

[2] In the last paragraph of this letter Clarke recorded the uprising of the slaves on the Phoenix, Captain Taylor, the night before the vessel left the coast. In Clarke's next letter, May 21, he reiterated much of the information in this, adding that he had learned from Captain Absome (?), who had just arrived on the coast from Lancaster, that by act of Parliament all American property was to be confiscated wherever found.

fited her out with Brandy when I Sail'd for at that time Brandy was much wanted, as there was no rum at Markett, and She might by this time have been with you Again, with part of my Cargo and her Own, which as things has turn'd out would have been greatly to Advantage, Dutch Brandy has the preferance to English Brandy, and rum before both.

There has been here since my Arrival 6 Rummen from the West Indies, two of Which is gone off, So that the Coast has been very well Supplyed with rum, and the Hawk and Apollo, two Ships belonging to London, has Brought from Holland 70,000 Galls. of Gin and Brandy. The latter has not sold any yet, She has been Arrived but a few days. The Former has sold I believe near all amongst the Dutch Castles. If you should determine to send the Fletcher with Brandy, Dutch Brandy would be the best, and I believe by farr the Cheapest.

I am excessive sorry to hear there is no likelyhood of matters being Accomodated between Great Britain and her Colonies, and likewise that such Acts of Parliament pass'd, to take All the American Vessels, for I assure you we had like to have been taken off the Coast, from the orders the Men of Warr had dated Octr. 11th 1775; had I not keeped out of the way All the time the Menawar were on the Coast. And I have been in the greatest Dilemma Imaginable About the Acts, and what to do with the Vessel, As I never durst take Any Slaves on board not thinking the Intrest safe to be brought off in her, Untill a few days ago I found Some Exemtions from Acts pass'd to take All Americans, in the publick Ledger of Feb'y 7th (Viz. Exemption 4th) is Ships cleared out from any port of Great Britain or Ireland before the 1st Jany. 1776 for Any of the British Sugar Colonies in the West Indies, and Ships cleared out from the Said British Colonies and bound to Great Britain or Ireland, Provided 2/3 of the owners of Such Ships as[are] his Majestys Subjects Residing in Great Britain or Ireland, or Some of the Said Sugar Colonies. The Above Act entirely Acquits us, as we are cleared out for Jamaica, and Coppy of Our Register Sent to Montego Bay, will entirely Acquit us from farther trouble.

Your paragraph Concerning geting a few Guns on Account of the American privateers, there is none to be gott, Every body that has any do not chuse to part with them for the Same Reasons, And for my part I do not think but that the American Privateers are So large that 4 or 6 Guns would be of little use, if to be had. You better know what danger there is of privateers than I do, So beg you will Insure my Intrest, [f]or as much as you think prudent, but as our Stay on the Coast will be so long, I am in great hopes Every thing may be Setled before we Reach the W. Indies, and That Great Britain and her Colonies may be Unitted in a Everlasting Union, Is my Sincere Wish. . . .

Shall Acquaint Messrs. Hibberts and Nephews as near as possibly I can the time I expect to leave the Coast,[2] The Vessels now here are Viz:

CHRISTENBORG CASTLE ACCRA Decem'r 1 1776.

D'r Sir, I dare Say You'l be Supprised as well as Dissapointed when this Letter Informes you I am Still on the Coast Acation'd by the Danish Company not paying me Agreeable to Contract, The reason of there noncompliance is there falling into a palaver with there Duch Nabours which for along time Stop'd there Trade.[2]

However, trade has taken arun here for this last month and I have recived all my Slaves to about thirty Six or Seven which I hope to gitt Very Soon and dout not of Sail'g of the Coast by Chrismas.

I am Sorry I have So dissagreeable a Story now to tell, which is about the 8th of Last Month our Slaves rose on board and a large Number of them jumpt overboard, out of which twenty Eight Men and two woman whare Drown'd, Six men taken up by the Moree Towns people which Mr. Klearck the Governor of the Foart, at that place,[3] took out of there hands and has them in his Foart I indeavourd to gitt them, but the Towns people Ask Eleven oz. pr head for takeing them up, So I could not Settle it with them, and being Oblig'd to return to Accra again in Oder to Settle, I have beeg the favour of Mr. Mill to Settle it for me and i dout not he will do it much Sooner and on more reasonable'r termes then I can.

Thare is likewise apawn boy Mising which for a woman Slave, and was not heard of when I Left Cape Coast, and if not found will add one More to our loss. I am Sorry to Say that the Insurrectison on board happen'd not by Accident Somuch as through avery grate Neglect in Mr. Hill, in not Chaining the Slaves that day as Usual and agrater peace of Misconduct in going out of the Vessel and takeing all the Chiff Officers with him that knew whare any thing wass, and Leaving the Slaves out of the Chain, (and on deck). The reason

Richard Miles, not long after this, received an "ad interim" appointment as governor in chief of the British settlements on the Gold Coast. He was superseded in March, 1780. In 1782 he was made governor and held the office two years. J. B. Weuves, probably the second executor, was governor in 1781. George Macdonald, The Gold Coast, p. 346.

[268] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

[2] Clarke had written on Oct. 1 that the Danes had disappointed him. At that time he had on board 109 slaves, his boat had gone to the Danish factory for 12 or 15 more, there were 10 awaiting him at the English factory at Prampram, and some due to him at Anamabo. He had sent two slaves off by Captain Champlin, for the benefit of his family in Rhode Island, which was cut off from receiving any funds directly from Fletcher.

[3] R. A. Klarck was the governor of the Dutch fort at Mouree.

he gives for going on Shore wass about three of the people he had differ'd with that Morning and had Stop'd there Alowance of adram for gitting Drunk with the rum Sent in the boate for the people that Swims of the water, and when the boate returnd again In shore for More water the people wood not Come of, So he went on Shore after them and in the time of there being a Shore the Slaves took the Oppertunity to rise and jump over board, they being well Secured in Irons, they could not[swim?], Nor did they any mischiff Otherways. Dissapointments, Crosses and Losses has closely attended us this Voyage, whare and how they will end God only knows, We have lost three Ancors, 2 boats with them there Sails, Oars etc. besides 2 Swivel guns.

I am hartily Sorroy I had so Dissagreeable a Story to wright you, However we will now leave it, and aquaint you that our Slaves on board are all well and we have About 200 on board, and I dout not of Compleating my purchass of 275 Slaves not-with-Standing the grate Exspence that attended our long Stay on the Coast. Our beef and other provishons runs very Short and not a bar'l of any kind to be purchast at any rate whatever, but as Long as we have Slaves provishon plenty there is no dainger of Starving. We heave had no late Arival on the Coast, and there is but Very few goods, and no rum, there will be agrate Opening in avery Short time for Some fourtanate parson or other, wharein he may Make a very grate Voyage. The Coast is now in want of allmost Every Necessary both for trade and Every thing Else. The last rum Vessel that wass here is Capt. Stanton Hazard in a brig of Mr. Romes and had it not have been for his Uncommon Leakage he wood have made avery grate Voyage. he has lost on forth part of his Cargo, he Sold at 140 g'l for men and 120 for woman he is now at Cape Coast. If the Fletcher wass here She wood turn out a Cargo of Brandy Excessive well, for I assure you Lichcure never wass more wanted then at preasant.

I have fully Aquainted you in my former letters of our Situation and dout not you have taken Every precaution Necessary to gard against the Worst, and Every Dainger that thretten's us, and that a Coppy of our Regester is Loged at Monteagu bay, whare I hope to be in Feby. I have left orders with the Dochter to Write you, if any of the Vessels Sails from windard while I am Down here, Therefore if any thing new hass Transspired he will let you no. . . .

269. John Bell to John Fletcher, 1776.[1]

Cape Coast Roade, 15 Decr. 1776.

Sir: Agreable to Capt. Clarkes desire, I take the oppertunity of the Hope C Fletcher sailing from hence to write you a few lines, in order to acquaint you how your affairs is situated here, but am exceeding sorry it is not in my power to send you more agreable Accounts, for, as Capt. Clarke has from time to time Observed to you, the Voyage has been attended with nothing but losses and disapointments, so to compleat the whole, on Friday the 8th Inst. we had the misfortune to lose 36 of the best slaves we had by an Insurrection, this unlucky affair happened about a mile to leeward of this roade, when there was only the Boatswain, Carpenter, 3 White people and myself on board (of white people). Capt. Clarke Mr. Carr and boats crew were on there passage up from Accra, 3 of the white people had that morning left the boat when a watering and Capt. Hill was gone ashore wt Mr. Risle and boats Crew in order to get them off again, We had 160 Slaves on board and were that day lett out of the Deck Chains in order to wash, about 2 OClock They began by siesing upon the Boatswain (luckly the only white person upon the main deck) but he soon got disengaged and got abaft the Barricade, after receiving a wound on his breast and one under his Chin, both well again. They Continued to threw Staves, billets of wood etc., and in endeavoring to get down the Barricado, or over it for upwards of 40 Minutes, when finding they could not effect it all the Fantee and Most of the Accra Men Slaves jumped over board, in my opinion with an intend to get up abaft, but the Currant running to strong to leeward very few of them could fetch the Ship again. At last we got a signal hoisted for the boat to come off (having none alongside). Sometime after the boat and a Cannoe came off and picked up 6 men and M. boys after being upwards of 2 hours in the water and got far to leeward. When all was a little setled we found 32 Men and Men boys w't 2 women a mising, the best Slaves we had. We only fired 2 masquets amongst them, one wt Powder only and one wt a little dust in it, had we fired more almost every one of them would have jumped over board, a few got cut wt cutlasses, but are geting well again, no white man excepting the boatswain got hurt, had the women assisted them in all probability your property here at this time would have been but small. The women having no hand in it was owing to their having no time to consult about it, as their rissing at that time was entirely owing to there being so many white people out of the Vessel, (which they said themselves) though [269] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76. Bell is the doctor to whom Clarke refers in the preceding letter.

they had 2 or 3 times before been going to attempt it. The only reason we can give for their attempting any thing of the kind, is, their being wearied at staying so long on board the ship. Those left will give no reason for their riseing, but lay the blame entirely on those that lost. There is 4 Men and 2 Men boys now in Mauree fort (a dutch fort about 4 Miles to leewd. of this) which was picked up by the natives, who the Gov'r sent off in cannoes for the purpose. They at presant insist upon the full price for them, but Capt. Clarke is in hopes of geting one half for the other, being the Common Custom of this Country. There was a rum brig lying at C. Coast, but could see nothing of the affair, by reason of the ship rideing right head too her. You will probably think I have been too particular for so disagreable a Subject, therefore shall say no more of it

Capt. Clarke arr'd the 9th ult. from Accra wth 11 Slaves, Mr. Carr has Since brought up 44, so that we have now recd. 114 Slaves from the Dainish Company. They have had a good dale of Shantee trade lately, but their factorys to leeward has had little or none. Capt. Clarke went down to Accra the 26th Ult. and I believe will not return till all is setled there, as Mr. Carr went down the 8th ult. in a large boat he bourowed in order to bring up all or most of what is due so that we have Some hopes of sailing in all this month. There is 4 or 5 Slaves due here and at Annamaboe yet, one of which I'm affraid will be lost, as a pawn ran away from the boat at C. Coast the 8th ult. and they deny his ever geting to Annam'e. He had been back and forward in the boats all the while we have been upon the Coast, by desire of his Father. Capt. Clarke ordered the Ship up here as there is no wood or water to be got to leeward of this, and the boat brings up the slaves as fast as they are purchased. the Ship is now full wooded and watered

We have now 192 Slaves on board, in pretty good health, but have had the misfortune to bury a boy of a Dropsy. That unlucky accident has hurt the looks of our main deck much, and men slaves is very scarce wh is a jeneral Complaint. . . . There has been no fresh Arrivals letely, excepting a rum brig from Granada, who immediately disposeded of what rum he had to the whites at 120 and 140 G. pr slave, that article begins to be very scarce here.

The trade here begins to come in and most of the Vessels are out of goods. The Constantine C't Robe of Bristol, The Fly, Blandle, of Liverpool, are done purchaseing, and only wait for some debts. The Gascoyne, Thoburn, of London is nigh done, so that the Brooks, Noble, of L'ple is the only one purchaseing in Annamaboe, never theless the prices never were so high, being got to 9½ and 11½ oz. Pr. Slave to the blacks. C't Noble has keep't up his good, in order to lower the price, but 'am affraid will not succeed. The Hawk, Mill (lying here) has got very few goods. Gov'r Mill intends going off in her, from Whydah, the begining of the year.

The most Commanding articles here at presant is Rum and Tobacco. There has been no Portugee Vessel down lately, so that what little Tobacco there is sells for 5 and 6 oz. trade Pr roll, which since we arrived has sold for 1 and 1½ oz. trade.

Powder is at presant much wanted all along the Gold Coast, many of the beech towns being at Warr amongst themselves, or wth their Gov'rs.

Mr. Watts late chief of Tantun [2] has resigned his place on account of disputes he has had with the natives, and is going off in a brig belong'g to Granada, which Arr'd last July.

The Assortment of Goods upon a Slave is much the same as when we Arrived. . . .

off Cape Coast 8th Jany. 1777.

This morning finish'd all my Busness an am now Under Sail Acoming of the Coast. I have Settled the Slaves that wass at Mouree at the prices of one half, which makes our Loss to 31 Men and 2 women in the Insurrection. I have procurr'd Some Stock, with a little Salt provishons, Capt. Mills and Some other Frinds Spard, which I dout not of being Suffishant for the passage. we have avery healthey Ship at preasant, and have not bured but one Slave by a Naturrel death, and hope we Shall not have much Mortality. My Next I hope will be from Jamaica, at preasant there is nither goods nor Licure to be had on the Coast. There is Onely Capt Thobourn and Capt. Noble in Annamaboe Roade, a plenty of Slaves, I am Inform'd, I belive there purchass Near Compleated. I have got the Slave for the pawn boy, by panyaring[2] awoman. . . .

There wass so many Small ballences to pay Ocation'd by our Long Stay, when I was a Settleing I was Obg. to Draw abill on You in favour of Mr. Miles for £22 Ste'g or Sell on of my Slaves of Deck PC Capt. More Via Garnards more than 35 or £36 Stg. Eboe Slaves 32 or £33 S'g Pr head, Bills for the payment are drawn 1/3 Payable in 12 M'ts, 1/3 in 24 M's, and the Remainder 30 or 36 M'ts after date. Mr. Fletcher wishes to engage a freight for the Vessel, but it will be impossible to make any such agreement wt the Guinea factors, in the presant temper of the times. If you come wth your Vessel to Kingston (wch is contrary to our presant expectations) we may possibly be able to give you some assistance in selling the Negroes, or making the most advantageous terms wth others for the benefit of yourself and Owners, but it will be out of our powers to go to any out port to sell the Cargoe. . . .

LONDON 10th Feby. 1777.

D'r Sir. . . . I apprehend f'm all Accts. you will find the times much worse at Jama. than ever you expected for Sale of your cargo, owing to the great glut of Negroes carryed down to that Island of late, has reduced the price Much, and payments they are got to immoderate lengths, so that no trade can possibly Support the credit given, besides those Jama. houses here that has stop'd and got time to pay (wch I advised you off in my last) must Effect many of the planters at Jamaica very much. The House of Sericold and Jackson was the beginners and occasioned all this mischief. I hope you have Steared clear of any of there connexions at Montego Bay. Many house here, Morse and Smiths, has lately Stop'd owing to the formers connexions, all which makes the times here very Alarming, and no body here will scarce accept bills without Value in hand. I cannot say more than I have in my former on our concern, being well Satisfied you will do everything for the best that tends to our Interest wth Safety. If you have been Oblidged to Sell your Slaves on the plan Mr. Hibberts has lately adopted (wch I fear other houses will too Soon follow,) Viz: Selling the Cargoes on the Owners Acct. and risque, I would recomend, if not too late, to get the Houses own bonds that Sells the Cargo preferable to the diff't Planters Bonds, by wch means we have but one house to look to, instead of so many diff't People, and in such case to take more produce on our own Accts. than before ordered, esspecially dispatch sake, so as to Sale wth the 1st Convoy, which I take for granted you will not fale to do, and give me timely advise by the Man of Warr and Packet, that I may make the necessary Insurance. If I had thought the times had been so bad, I should have recommended to you, if cou'd have been done, to rented Ab't 60 Negroes on our joint Acct. upon lease for 3 years to 4 differ-ant people, good Safe Men, to make good the Valuation, or Selling price at the usual rent given for New Negroes, Say f'm 8 to 10 Pr Cent on Value, And at the end of the lease to pay the Amount or else deliver up the Negroes and pay for the difficiency, but I suppose it will be too late to think of it and only mention this as it occurs to me, as it might have been for our benefit. I must inform you that an act of Parliament will soon pass, which Empowrs the Admiralty to grant Letters of Marque to Merchant Ships, to make Prizes of any Amerrican Ships or Property—wch as you have been so harrased on that Acct. and to prevent any future troubles, I am to desire you will make over a deed sale for your quarter part of the Vessel to me or Mr. Barwell Evins, or any other friend in trust, after wch you can with safety make an affidavit and get a New Register made out for Ship Thames in my name and Mr. Evins only of London as Sole owners, and cargo to be Ship'd on owners Acct. Marcked 8 T and to let no part appear in your Name, which will entirely put it out of the power of any Busy person giving trouble. And upon the Ships Arrival here, all matters will be properly adjusted between us as before, as I think you may rely on my honour, on the Occasion, this I before hinted in my letters of 7th Feby. and 25th Novr. Was you to mention yourself of London in the Register I think will not be so Safe as the other way, you being so well known f'm R. I. might give room for Ill natured people to make a handle off, and if you Should have Already got a Register made out before this comes to hand, you can Assign your reasons to the Collector, that you have Sold out, in order to get a new Register in the name of the Sold Owners of London etc., what I have before hinted I think will be Sufficient for your government on that head. I am likewise of opinion it will be for our Mutual Intrest your comeing home to England in the Ship, as we can then adjust and Settle all Matters between us, after wch if you chuse it you can go home to your family, in some of the Transports, or Store Ships, otherways we may perhaps get a Freight for our Ship that way, and in case Matters are Setled wth America this Summer their will be a good opening for trade f'm hence thither. I Shall Honour your bill on me as advis'd for £36 Stg. when due, and have pd. Mrs. Clarkes bill on me for £100 S'g both wch are charged to Your debt. I am Sorry to find you have lost the S. Bower Anchor, and that the Old Cable proves so bad, if you should be oblidged to get either at Jama. you will do it in as Cheep a way as you can, Mr. Westmorland can Assist you in this Matter f'm Kingston, old Cordage used formerly to be had at Greenwich Kingstons etc. I must inform you I have Sent out a power of Attorney to Mr. Westmorland, and to Mr. Delarach of St. Eliz'bs Jama. to transact any affairs of mine in future, So that any papers or Bonds of our Concer[n]s may be left in their hands if Necessary when you leave the Island.

[274] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

275. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Westmorland and Company, 1777.[1]

Montego Bay 25th Ap'l 1777.

Much Esteemed Friends, I Received your kind fav'r wch you lodged in the hands of Messrs. Bernard and Montague, and am much obliged to you for your Information how slaves sell at Kingston and likewise the mode of payment. I have agreable to Mr. Fletchers orders applied to Messrs. Bernard and Montague but there terms are such that I cannot by any means think of complying with, which is to have our slaves sold for Bonds on Account of the Owners, those payments I am sure never will be agreable to Mr. Fletcher, for I am very confident they will cut but a poor figure in purchaseing a Guinea Cargo in London. I am now a treating wth Malcom and Neveson to take me up. Mr. Malcom is at presant here, I expect Mr. Neveson up to day from Lucea, at presant no terms are offered as agreed on, but wait the Arrival of Neveson. I was sorry to see it was not agrable to you to sell a Cargoe of Negroes any where but at Kingston, for it was my orders from Mr. Fletcher that if the House of Hibberts would not sell for such payment as would sute to dispatch my doctor to you, and that he did not doubt but you would do the business. Mr. Fletcher ordered me down on this side as imagineing Slaves would sell higher than at Kingston and I had much reither it had been agreable for you to have come over and Sold the Slaves, for it is entirely out of my power to come round to Kingston. My Ship is a compleat wreck for the night after I left Cape Coast I lost my Fore Mast, Fore top Mast, Fore top G'n Mast, Main top Mast and Sprung the head of my Main Mast, in a tarnado, So that in 2 Moments I was a compleat Wreck, and Considering my cargo and the place where I was it was truely to be said we were in a deplorable condition, such a one as I never before saw, nor never wish to see again. But this Voyage has been a Compoun of Losses, Crosses and disapointments, which I assure you so close attended us that we Scarce ever was clear of one 'till plunged into Anot'r and our evil genius has not yet left us, we have not been Successful in any one thing the Voyage, except in having lettle or no mortality, burying but 4 Slaves all this long disagreable Voyage, and keeping out of the hands of my Countrimen and arriving safe here after a long Passage of 15 Weeks and 12 Mo'ts Stay on the Coast. But have brought in my Slaves in very good order and healthy 240 of them, but as you justly observe the temper of the times are Such that there is nothing to be hoped from them towards Releaving a Short purchase and a large loss by Insurrection of 33 Slaves, wch you have heard of before now. I am informed that letters have been Returned from this place back to Kingston. I beg that if there is any in your hands or in the Post-office you will desire them to be sent back.

[275] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

276. Agreement between Peleg Clarke and Malcolm and Nevinson, 1777.[1]

Montegabay 26th April 1777.

Agreement between Capt'n Peleg Clarke of the Ship "Thames" and Messrs. Malcolm and Nevinson March't at St. Luciee. That the Said Malcolm and Nevinson are to Sell the Said Ships Cargo of Slaves on the following Condition Vize.

Bills are to be Drawn on John Fletcher Esqr. for the Nett proceeds of Said Cargo of Slaves on the 20th July Next

One third in Bills Pay'e at 24 Months Sight
One third in Bills Pay'e at 36 Months Sight
One third in Bills Pay'e at 42 Months Sight

Malcolm and Nevinson further Agree to give Captain Clarke One Hundred and Fifty Punchions of Rum the Amount of which to geather with the Ships Desbursements are to be deducted from the first payment at 24 months Sight as above menchond.

Also to give the Said Capt. Clarke Bills on John Fletcher Eqr. at fifteen Months Sight or the Amount in Rum as may be most Convenient for the Said Malcolim and Nevinson in Payment for his Coast Commission and payment in rum to four officers belonging to Said Ship Thames for one Slave each at the Rate the Cargo Averages at. The Preceeding Agreement each party is Satisfied with as Witness our Hands.[2]

Malcolm and Nevinson

277. Captain Peleg Clarke to John Fletcher, 1777.[1]

[May, 1771.]

Dear Sir, . . . I have had an offer f'm a New house, Messrs. Parkinson and Hill, and had it not been for the uncertainty of these Bills, I should have sat down wth them, but from the late great falair [failure] of the Guinea houses, I was a little susspicous as they are not thoroughly established. There Characters here is very good, but are not known the other side the water, and it is a long time untill 42 M'ts comes round, many Accidents may happen in that time, therefor thought it best to be sure, or at least the surest of any house here except Hibberts and Co. Aour friend Mr. Westmorland let me know by a letter it did not Sute him to sell a Cargoe in the Country and the Situation of our Vessel I could not get to Kingston.

[276] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

[2] Despite this statement Captain Clarke was far from satisfied with the agreement. His comment to Fletcher was, "those two here are Jews."

[277] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76. The first paragraph of the letter reports the terms of the agreement with Messrs. Malcolm and Nevinson.

London 12 Sept. 1777.

Dear Sir, . . . I mentioned something in my last of a Guinea schame with Rum from Jamaica in Comp'y with Mr. [illegible] Malcolm Esq. he to hold a Quarter part of Vessell and Cargo, but without he Guarantee the Sales of Negroes on Ships return and give Bills at 1, 2 and 3 years with Intrest on said Bills after 6 Months, Otherwise I will not be concerned, and Mr. Malcolme At same time to Supply the Cargo Rum and Outfitts for the Other owners 3 Quarters to be paid out of the Second Bill at 6 Months now sent Me home, allowing them the Difference of Interest the bill has to run, but not to Draw any Bill on me for an Adventure on that account, for reasons already Assigned. If you go to Jamaica you will turn the matter in your mind, and should think it will answer and is agreeable to Mr. Malcolm you have my Liberty for Self and other Owners to proceed on it provide you go the voyage your self to Guinea Otherwise I will not be concerned—which is my full Instructions on that mattr which you will abide by. If any certainty of Getting Slaves for Rum in a Short time at 140 or 150 Galls pr Slave it might Answer, but not otherwise as Insurance will be high, and it depends on Vessells are already gone on the Rum Trade from Jamaica or Windward Islands. All this I shall leave to your prudent consideration.[2] . . .

March 10, 1778.

. . . Mr. Bell has got a Birth in a Ship for 600 Slaves from Liverpool for Affrica, which goes for 600 Slaves. I have settled with him for Ballance of his wages as well as for his Priviledge and hard money, so that the Bill you sent for £47.16.9 answers the Two Latter. He has allowed me for the money received of yours of Mr. Westmoreland £52.0.3 Jama. Currency, which is at your Credit he also has delivered me your acct with Mr. Westmoreland with an Order on Mr. Jno. Peatt for Ballance say £171.31 4 Jama Currency.[2] . . .

[279] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

[2] Endorsed, "Received at Providence the 9th March 1778." What led Clarke to return to Rhode Island instead of embarking on the Guinea voyage which Fletcher here suggested one can only conjecture. It may be that in Jamaica he learned enough of the state of affairs to be convinced that a profitable voyage at that time was impossible.

[280] [1] Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76.

[2] Fletcher wrote again to Clarke on Apr. 16, 1779, probably concerning the voyage of 1777, that the underwriters refused to pay for the losses of the voyage, on the ground that Clarke had deviated from his course. They later paid £400 (Clarke Letter-Book, no. 76). The absence of material for the years 1779 to 1783 indicates that the Revolution for the time destroyed the American trade in slaves.

The Deposition of Isaac Gorham of Warren in the County of Bristol etc., Mariner On Oath saith that I the deponent on the 13th day of February AD 1783 Sailed from the port of Warren Master of the Sloop Patty bound to the West Indias and having on board a Negro Man about Eighteen or Twenty Years Old a Healthy Active Lad, the Property of Rhoby Whitting of Said Warren Widdow, and that on the Seventh day of March in the Same year being about four Leagues to windward of Monto Christo was taken by a Brittish Sloop of Warr Called Le Gatroon Command by Benjamin Hulk Esqr. and that Said Negroe was taken on board the Ship whereby he was lost to his Said Mistress and further saith not.

[281] [1] Publications, R. I. Hist. Soc. (new ser.), VIII. 192-193. Mrs. Whiting, widow of Nathaniel Whiting, had leased the slave Fantee to Edward Jones for twelve months, in return for 54 Spanish milled dollars. A few months later Jones complained that Fantee had stolen from him and his friends and had then run away. After his capture, on the road to Boston, Mrs. Whiting disposed of him (ibid., pp. 190-192). The law of 1779 forbidding the exportation of negroes probably allowed for the sale of refractory slaves, otherwise this transaction would have been illegal.

Providence, 26th 8th Mo. 1783.

Respected Friends, Being informed yesterday that you had in Contemplation sending a Vessel to Africa for the purpose of getting Negroes and selling them as Slaves in the West Indies;[2] and as I have ever entertained a respectful opinion of your humanity, as well as integrity as Merchants, and remembring how it was with me, when our Company were engaging in that Traffick, that altho' the convictions of my own Conscience were such as to be averse to the Voyage, yet in reasoning upon that Subject with those who were for pursuing it, my holding Slaves at that time so weakened my arguments, that I suffered myself, rather than break my Connexions, to be Concern'd, but as I have many times since thought, that if I had known the Sentiments of others, or had their concurring Testimonies to those Scruples, I then had, I should have been preserved from an Evil, which has given me the most uneasiness, and has left the greatest impression and stain upon my own mind of any, if not all my other conduct in life; and it appears particularly so when I am favoured with a quiet retrospection and arraign it before the righteous judge of all men; Under these considerations I felt some engagement for your preservation from so great an evil as I have found that Trade to be, and with a view to dissuade and discourage your pursuing the Voyage, That you may avoid the unhappy reflections which I have had I am induced to Write you and desire your serious consideration on the Subject, when you feel your minds calmly disposed for pursuing such a course of life, as will preserve your Characters as Men of Humanity and feelings for the distresses and afflictions of others, which I have observed with much Satisfaction, on some occasions to be very Conspicuous. . . .

you are Men of Feelings, and abilities to live without this Trade, why then should you be concernd in it against your own—against the feelings of your Friends. I rest in hope, that my last has been a mistaken information, for when I delivered Clarke the Pamphlet, on this Subject I understood your intention was not to Trade in Slaves, but in Ivory, Wax, Gold dust etc. If this be the Case and you should give

The next manuscript is a much-corrected draft of the same letter, initialed "M. B.," and endorsed, "Copy to Clark and Nightingale, 26 8th mo. 1783." This house had offered Aaron Lopez a schooner suitable for the Guinea trade, ten years before. There was in their letter at that time no indication that they had used this vessel, or any other, for that trade themselves. Lopez Letter-Book, no. 634, p. 33.

Newport, April 29, 1784.

Much esteemed Friend: I am much pleased with your zeal, and persevering, assiduous attempts to discourage and abolish the slave trade and the slavery of the Africans among us.[2] Though I have a degree of the same zeal, yet I am apt to sink under discouragements which you seem easily to surmount. I have dared publicly to declare that this town is the most guilty, respecting the slave trade, of any on the continent, as it has been, in a great measure, built up by the blood of the poor Africans; and that the only way to escape the effects of divine displeasure, is to be sensible of the sin, repent, and reform.[3] This has greatly displeased a number, and I fear the most are far from a disposition to repent, especially they who have the greatest share of the guilt. This town, I greatly fear, will be the last in the State to do what they ought to do, and be foremost in it, respecting that most abominable traffic, and the consequent slavery that is among us. This gives me a gloomy prospect of our future circumstances. The freemen have chosen a new set of representatives, except one.[4] Though some of them are, in many respects, worthy men, I believe not one of them will vote for any law to discourage the slave trade, or the slavery of the Africans. And I suspect that they who planned this choice had a particular view to this. . . .

[3] That Clark and Nightingale were not deterred from entering the slave trade is indicated by a note to them on July 27, 1790: "Capt. Oliver Boreen, of the Sloop Providence, from the Coast of Africa, arrived here some few days since, but finding it impossible to dispose of his Slaves, left us for the Havannah. We enclose a/c of necessaries supplied him." Briggs, Cabot Family, II. 478.

[285] [1] Samuel Hopkins, Works, I. 119-120. Many of the letters which follow are in part printed in a "Memoir" by E. A. Park, contained in the first volume of the Works. Dr. Hopkins had become pastor of the First Congregational Church of Newport in 1770. From that time until his death he took an active part in the movement to abolish the slave trade and to improve the condition of the blacks. In many of his projects he was aided by Dr. Ezra Stiles, pastor of the Second Congregational Church of Newport 1755-1776, and throughout his life he and Moses Brown of Providence were in close sympathy on questions pertaining to the negro. He at one time wrote of Moses Brown: "Moses Brown is a man of a respectable character, as an honest, sensible man. He is a man of interest. He was not educated a Quaker, but joined that sect some years ago. He is a brother to the famous John Brown, the rich merchant in Providence. This Moses was once concerned in the slave trade; but for many years has been convinced of the iniquity of it, and his sin in practising it has lain heavy on his conscience. He thinks it his duty to do all in his power to put a stop to this traffic, and an end to the slavery of Africans, and to assist them to obtain their freedom, in all the ways he can. And he is active and unwearied in his endeavors to promote these ends. And I must say, that he and a number of his brethern, who join him in this matter, have acted a judicious, faithful, and honorable part. We have no men of any other denomination in these States, who appear so conscientious, discerning, faithful, and zealous, in this matter, as these Quakers do" (Hopkins to Levi Hart, Nov. 27, 1787, Works, I. 123).

[2] The February (1784) session of the General Assembly had passed an act authorizing the gradual abolition of slavery in Rhode Island, and repealing that clause in the act of 1774 which gave permission to bring into the state negroes that could not be sold in the West Indies (R. I. Recs., X. 7-8). This was a substantial gain. Dr. Hopkins need not have felt so much discouragement. Early in March Brown had written of the failure to obtain the act for which he and his friends had worked, at the same time sending to Dr. Hopkins copies of articles which had been published in the Providence papers: "the Influence of the Mercantile Interest in the House was greatly Exerted, and the Justice of the Subject thereby Overbourn and I am sorry I have it to say my Brother John was deep in the Opposition, yet I am apprehensive without the E'tions of the Speaker he would have fail'd of his Views . . . . If I understood the Attorney General Right he told me he had given thee his opinion on the Stoping of the Trade and that he thought by our Constitution the Assembly could not Restrain the members of the State from it." Moses Brown to Samuel Hopkins, Mar. 3, 1784, Moses Brown Papers, IV. 314.

The Friends have set a laudable example in bearing testimony against the slave trade, and exerting themselves to suppress the slavery of the Africans; and I must say, have acted more like Christians, in this important article, than any other denomination of Christians among us. To our shame be it spoken! The church in which I preside have agreed to declare, that the slave trade and the slavery of the blacks, as it has been practised among us, is a gross violation of the righteousness and benevolence which are so much inculcated in the gospel, and therefore, we will not tolerate it in this church. But it is thought that present circumstances will not admit of our addressing the General Assemby on that head, so as to answer any good purpose. What I published formerly in the weekly paper here, consisted chiefly in extracts from other authors,[5] all which you have doubtless seen, and most of them have since been printed in the Providence papers. Our printer gave such offence to a number, by publishing those extracts, and was so threatened, if he continued to insert such things in his paper, that he has been backward to do any thing of this kind since. He has, however, consented to print some observations on that head, which I thought proper at this time, next Saturday, a copy of which I shall send to you when I have opportunity.[6]

[3] Dr. Hopkins's congregation was largely connected in one way or another with the slave trade.

[4] The Newport deputies in the next session of the General Assembly were George Hazard, Henry Marchant, George Champlin, John Topham, Peleg Clarke, and Daniel Mason. Those from Providence were Joseph Nightingale, Paul Allen, and Ebenezer Thompson. Brown later wrote, "When I heard of some of the present members of Assembly being Chosen I gave up hopes of Stopage of the Slave Trade at present." Brown to Hopkins, May 14, 1784, Moses Brown Papers, V. 1 (324).

[5] Park here adds: "He published, at this period, various extracts from the writings of the Bishop of Gloucester; and several years afterward, extracts from the works of Clarkson and Paley, on the slave system. He also published, if we may judge from the style of the anonymous essays, more of original matter than came from the pen of any other Rhode Islander on this topic." Works, I. 120 n.

[6] This article was printed in the Newport Mercury, May 1, 1784, and reprinted in Works, II. 745-748. During 1784, 1785, and 1786 a constant correspondence was maintained between Hopkins and Brown over methods of educating the public and

In 1803 he delivered a cargo of Congo negroes in Georgia, on the Armstadt; in 1804 he was assured of his brother's safe arrival in Havana on the Minerva, with 150 slaves, of whom Collins owned one-fourth. 287. Dr. Samuel Hopkins to Moses Brown, 1787.[1]

Newport, March 9, 1787.

My Friend, I wrote you two days ago, But having since received a letter from Mr. Law, dated, Charleston, Feb. 16, I write again to send you the following abstract from it:

A Capt. Moses Smith of Providence, shiped two free Negroes, as seamen on board his vessel; and when he arrived in this place, he, instead of paying them their wages, according to agreement, sold them for Slaves. A gentlemen whom I desired to inquire into the matter, informed me yesterday, that they were redeemed, and set at liberty. But I think such iniquity ought not to go unpunished, if any law will take hold of it; And I wish you to write to Mr. Moses Brown, if nothing more, it may be a means of their preventing others doing in like manner.

You will please to make what use of this you think best. He informs me that the Legislature in N. Carolina had made a law prohibiting the importing Slaves into that State; And that a Senator, member of the Legislature of South Carolina, then sitting at Charleston, had told him that he did not doubt but a law of the same tenor would be enacted at that session.[2] the progress of their favorite cause. In 1786 Brown gave £20 toward a prize for the best essay against the slave trade, moved to this act by the results of the Cambridge prize which had brought forth Clarkson's Commerce of the Human Species. The sentiment against the trade was growing but the trade itself still continued—In 1785 Dr. Hopkins wrote that a vessel had recently sailed from Boston for Africa. Nathaniel Russell was selling an occasional negro for the Champlins in Charleston (Moses Brown Papers, V. 21, 55; Champlin Papers, 1786-1788, no. 138). "Providence, January 29 . . . . We hear that a schooner, which sailed about 12 months since from New-Port, for the coast of Africa (belonging to Messrs. Seymour and Company of Grenada) was lately met with at sea, by a vessel bound to Bristol, in England. She was without Sails, had only 15 negroes on board and those in a very emaciated and wretched condition, having doubtless been long at sea. The negroes it is supposed had rose and murdered the Captain and crew; after which many of the blacks must have died. Those found on board were carried into Bristol" (New York Packet, Feb. 14, 1785). Capt. Robert Champlin, at this time in the service of the Graftons of Salem, delivered a cargo of negroes in Charleston in 1785. His instructions, dated Oct. 19, 1784, his wage agreement, and several letters relating to his sale are to be found in the Essex Institute, envelope marked "Slave Trade in Salem."

Newport, Oct. 22, 1787.

My kind friend: I thank you for your two letters of the 9th and 15th Inst. and for the news papers you have sent me. I have received those which contain the last Part of Crito.[2] Those containing the first part, which you say you ordered to be forwarded to me, have not yet come to hand. Perhaps they have not been sent. Mr. Foster has undertaken to get the transcript you sent me inserted in the Herald. I did not receive it soon enough to be inserted last week. I have been hoping for Ramsey's treatise,[3] and am sorry to inform you I have not yet received it. Hope it will come safe. I am hurt by the doings of the convention respecting the Slave Trade.[4] It is as you Suppose. They have carefully secured the practice of it in these States for 20 years, and prevented any Asylum for slaves during that term, unless every individual State, should suppress this trade. They have taken it out of the hands of congress. We cannot determine That the major part of the delegates were pledged with [289] [1] Moses Brown Papers, VI. 15.

[2] Hopkins was the author of an essay, signed Crito, published in the Providence Gazette and Country Journal, Oct. 6 and 13, 1787. This may have been the one which the Newport editor refused to print. Copies of the essay, sent by Moses Brown to the members of the Rhode Island legislature, Hopkins thought helped to bring about the prohibitory legislation. Early the next year he corresponded with Brown over printing it in other places. Hopkins, Works, I. 122, II. 613-624.

[3] James Ramsay had before this date published three pamphlets. The one which obtained widest circulation, and to which reference is probably here made, was An Essay on the Treatment and Conversion of African Slaves in the British Sugar Colonies (1784).

[4] The convention referred to is of course the Constitutional Convention, which had just completed its labors in Philadelphia. "Some of the Delegates appologize for its [the Constitution's] imperfections particularly in respect to that part which appears to give countenance to the Slave trade for twenty one years, tho' the construction they put on those Sections is, that they only limit the power of the Federal Legislature, and are not intended to restrain the Legislatures of the respective States from enacting such laws, or Supplements to laws already in force, as they shall judge expedient for the prohibition of the trade, or the abolition of Slavery within their own jurisdiction, and some of our Lawyers have given their opinion to the same purport; There was a desire prevailed in the Convention to subvert the enormous traffic, which the Representatives from So. Carolina, and the àdjacent States being aware of, vigorously opposed, and is said to be the sole cause of this very inconsistent part of their System professed to be founded on liberal principles, and is given out among other reasons by the Virginia delegates who declined Signing, for their dessent; However should the plan be adopted, which seems not to be improbable; it will be requisite for the advocates for the Enslaved negroes to consider, whether consistent with their laudable desire for their emancipation and the suppression of the iniquitous Commerce to Africa for Slaves, they ought not firmly to remonstrate against those very exceptionable parts of a Constitution said to be intended to hold up a standard of impartial Liberty." James Pemberton to Brown, Philadelphia, Nov. 16, 1787, Moses Brown Papers, VI. 18.

this. Some of the Southern delegates no doubt, insisted upon it that the introduction of slaves should be secured, and obstin[a]tely refused to consent to any constitution, which did not secure it. The others therefore consented, rather than have no constitution, or one in which the delegates should not be unanimous. I fear this is an Action, which will bring a curse, for that we cannot prosper. At the same time it appears to me that if this constitution be not adopted by the States, as it now stands, we shall have none, and nothing but anarchy and confusion can be expected. . . .

It has been objected by some of the ministers against preferring a memorial to the General Assembly respecting the Slave trade, That the present ruling part in the Assembly, have appeared to be so destitute of all principles of justice, or regard to it, and have acted such an iniquitous part, that there is an inpropriety in applying to them for justice; especially for the ministers of the Gospel to do it, whom they hold in the highest contempt, and would embrace any opportunity to pour contempt upon them, which we should give them by laying such a petition before them. This prevents any thing of that kind being done at present.[5]

290. Act to Prevent the Slave Trade, 1787.[1]

An Act to prevent the slave trade, and to encourage the abolition of slavery.

Whereas the trade to Africa for slaves, and the transportation and selling of them into other countries, is inconsistent with justice, and the principles of humanity, as well as the laws of nature, and that more enlightened and civilized sense of freedom which has of late prevailed: and whereas, the General Congress of the United States, in the year 1774, taking the said trade into consideration, agreed and resolved as follows: "That we will neither import nor purchase any slaves imported after the first day of December next; after which time we will wholly discontinue the slave trade, and will neither be concerned in it ourselves, nor will we hire our vessels or sell our

[5] In August Dr. Hopkins wrote: "I do not think it likely that the Assembly will take the matter up, so as to do anything against the slave trade, at the next session. If they do not wholly dismiss the petition I shall be glad. I have pretty good evidence that some of them speak fair words to you and your friends, who yet are determined against doing anything against the slave trade. I enclose to you an Essay which I have attempted to get published in the Newport Herald. And the printer promised me that he would insert the whole of it, at the head of his paper, this week, so that it should be out before the sitting of the Assembly. But he has since told me that he cannot print it, and has returned it. He says he has consulted his friends, and they tell him that it will greatly hurt his interest to do it; that there is so large a number of his customers, either in the slave trade, or in such connection with them, or so disposed with respect to it, to whom it will give the greatest offence, that it is not prudent for him to do it." commodities or manufactures to those that are:" Nevertheless, forgetful of the danger which then impended, and inattentive to the principles of justice and sound policy manifested in the aforesaid resolution, a renewal of the African trade for slaves has been entered into by divers inhabitants of this state: For the prevention whereof,

Be it enacted by this General Assembly, and by the authority thereof it is enacted, that no citizen of this state, or other person residing within the same, shall for himself or any other person whatsoever either as master, factor, or owner of any vessel, directly or indirectly import or transport, buy or sell, or receive on board their vessel with intent to cause to be imported or transported from their native country, any of the natives or inhabitants of any state or kingdom in that part of the world called Africa, as slaves, or without their voluntary consent.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that every citizen, inhabitant, or resident, as aforesaid, who shall import or transport, or cause to be imported or transported, any of the said inhabitants of Africa, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, and be thereof lawfully convicted, shall forfeit the sum of one hundred pounds, lawful money, for every person by him or them so imported or transported; and the sum of one thousand pounds for every vessel by him or them employed in the importation or transportation aforesaid, to be recovered by bill, complaint, or information before the superior court, or either of the inferior courts within this state: the one moiety whereof shall be paid into the general treasury for the use of this state, the other moiety to and for the use of the person or persons who shall prosecute for the recovery the same,

Provided, nevertheless, that this act do not extend to vessels which have already sailed, their owners, factors, or commanders, for and during their present voyage.[2]

[2] From the tone of the correspondence between Brown and Hopkins in the months preceding this meeting of the General Assembly one may gather that the abolitionists themselves did not expect the passage of this measure. Indeed, one is puzzled to account for its success. The Newport deputies were the same as those of 1785 and 1786 with the addition of William Tripp, and among the entire body of deputies there had been few changes in the two years past. Christopher Champlin and Esek Hopkins were no longer in the Assembly, which may or may not have had significance; but Caleb Gardner, who sent vessels to Africa in 1786, 1787, 1788, and 1789, had become one of the "assistants," and George Champlin was still among the Newport deputies. As soon as the bill was passed those who had been working for it turned their attention to Connecticut. Within a month Hopkins sent a number of newspaper articles thither for republication, with these comments: "Is it not extraordinary that this State, which has exceeded the rest of the States in carrying on this trade, should be the first Legislature on this globe which has prohibited that trade? Let them have the praise of this; especially as the Assembly were so nearly unanimous, there being but four dissenting voices. If Boston and Connecticut should not join us in this, I fear this law will soon be like some other Rhode Island laws" (Hopkins to Levi Hart, Nov. 27, 1787, Hopkins, Works, I. 123). About this time Brown wrote to Hopkins that plans were already on foot to carry on the African trade from Middletown and Norwich. See Hopkins to Hart, ibid., pp. 123, 158.

291. Jonathan Edwards to Moses Brown, 1788.[1]

Dear Sir, . . . I inclose a copy of the late act of our Assembly [2] concerning the slave trade. I am mortified, as I dare say you will be, that the bill was so mutilated in the upper house. You will find, there is nothing in this law, to prevent the exportation of slaves, and of servants born since March 1st 1784. I expect that now the poor creatures will be carried out in ship-loads. I have heard since the passing of this law, of one man employed in purchasing Negroes for exportation. The lower house were not pleased with the law as it now stands; It passed it because the upper house would not do better. Mr. Mitchel of Wether[s]field is said to be the chief cause of the mischief. I wish you and two or three of your friends had tarried a few days longer; I conceive it might have answered a good purpose. Or if you will come up with another memorial on the fifth of January when the Assembly is to meet in this city again, I will join with you in another attempt.[3] If you should conclude upon this measure, I wish you to inform me of it and also wish that you would as far as may be, inform yourself of any facts relating to the exporting of slaves or of children born since March 1st 1784, from this State. . . .

[291] [1] Moses Brown Papers, VI. 45. Brown and Hopkins had for some time been sending literature to the Rev. Jonathan Edwards the younger, minister in New Haven, who was a member of a committee of clergy appointed to petition the New Hampshire and Connecticut legislatures for a law abolishing the trade. From both of these states Rhode Island vessels bound for Africa were said to be clearing. No prohibitory law was ever passed in New Hampshire, probably because the evil never assumed large proportions. Ibid., pp. 43, 49.

[2] This adds to the preceding account and modifies it slightly.

293. William Rotch, jr., to Moses Brown, 1789.[1]

New Bedford, 5 mo 6 1789.

Esteemed Friend, Moses Brown, A circumstance has taken place here within the knowledge of several friends as also by their advice, which we should all have been glad had been undertaken by or in behalf of the Society for the abolition of Slavery,[2] but the urgency of the occasion not admitting time to consult or inform them, and not knowing how far individuals not qualified to represent the body might act, favoured the conclusion not to take up the matter in their behalf. The Brig't Hope[3] John Stanton master arrived at Westport (Acoaxet) on the 3d inst (after laying several days at Howlands Ferry) late from Africa and West Indies, the Capn with Caleb Gardner came over here to enter the Brig'n from St. Martin's and clear the Cargo for Newport the 4th: and returned the Fifth, and the following particulars having been obtained vizt. that she saild from Boston in 6th mo last for Africa thence brot 116 Slaves, and sold them in West Indies, that application was now made for a new Register, to change the name of Vessel, Capn. and Owners and that after Sheathing she was to proceed to Boston for a Cargo Rum to prosecute another Voyage, thus informed Wm. Gorden (Deputy [293] [1] Moses Brown Papers, VI. 67. William Rotch, jr., was the third member of his family concerned in New Bedford commerce. To them and the group of Friends with whom they were associated may be attributed the strong antislavery sentiment which prevailed in this place throughout the eighteenth century.

[2] This refers to the Providence Society for the Abolition of the Slave Trade organized in February, 1789, of which Moses Brown was an active member from the beginning. Its constitution is printed in Hazard, College Tom, app. XVI., pp. 256-260; the act of incorporation, with a list of members, including many from Massachusetts and a few from Connecticut, as well as those from Rhode Island, is in R. I. Recs., X. 382-385. A "Citizen," writing in the Providence Gazette, February, 1789, objected to the organization since it might injure the reputations of the slave traders, some of whom were "the best citizens of Newport," and also since it tended to prevent the slave trade, which was a real benefit to the Africans, as it saved them from the barbarities of their native land and introduced them into civilized regions. The writer added that the spirit of the society was adverse to the Constitution of the United States, one article of which was made on purpose to prevent the injustice which the society and its adherents were practising (Hopkins, Works, I. 126-127). The "Citizen" was answered by a number of writers and a most acrimonious series of letters ensued (United States Chronicle, Feb. 19, through March), in the midst of which John Brown wrote to Moses: "Brother Moses, I wish to know weether you are the author of the ps signed 'a friend' tho a [illegible] to a Citizen as printed in the Last Saturdays paper. P. S. I might have given up my name as the Author of the Citizen had not the Billet you coate from the printer advised my not gratifying the Inquirer." Moses Brown Papers, VI. 57.

[3] The Hope had cleared from Newport for Africa June 26, 1787, registered from that place. She cleared again for Africa on Oct. 3, 1789, this time registered from New Bedford. The United States Chronicle, June 4, 1789, contained the following item: "A MAN. An action of debt, on the lately enacted law of Massachusetts prohibiting the African trade, is commenced by William Gordon, Esq. of Bedford, at the Inferior Court to be held in the County of Bristol, in that State, on the 9th day of September next, against Caleb Gardner, of Newport, and Nathaniel Briggs of Tiverton, Owners, and John Stanton of said Newport, Captain of the brigantine Hope, lately returned into one of the ports of that State, from discharging a cargo of the wretched inhabitants of Africa in the West Indies."

Sherriff) took out a Writ agreeable to the Slave Trade Law of this State including Caleb Gardner, Nathl. Briggs and John Stanton, with Summons for them to appear before Edw Pope Esqr. the 22d of 6 mo next, which writ was served upon them very unexpectedly this morning after Sun rising, but unfortunately before the Subpoena was served upon the Sailors, they found means to cross the River into your State, and altho it is left in an officers hand to watch their return I have no expectation evidence will be obtained from them. I hope care will be taken to procure sufficient evidence to prove that the said Brigt. brought from Africa Slaves either by the people of said Vessel and others that have been there, without going to the West Indies therefor. They obtained a bondsman for their appearance, and told the Officer, "they were not residents in this State and that the Vessel was not owned by them, but by some person in New York wherefore the action could not stand," this was all the plea that was made, if its found either of the three persons were not resident in this State at the time the Brig was fitted out the action will be drop'd with that person, but as this was not ascertained the whole were taken in and the day of trial was put at a distance in order that knowledge might be obtained. The Sum sued for is £6000. Gordon will send to Newport to obtain the depositions of the people who were in the Brign but your assistance will doubtless facilitate. I have recommended his applying to Lyman. I expect to be in Boston all next week, and shall be very glad to hear from thee on this subject by post doubtless proof can be had there of this Vessels carrying Slaves to Martinico.

The declaration to the writ will be sent to Boston and if it is not properly drawn our law admits of another being filed any time before the Court.

The Brigs Register is now in the office, Gardner and Briggs Owners.[4]

294. William Rotch, jr. to Moses Brown, 1789.[1]

Boston 5 mo. 16, 1789.

Esteemed Friend, Moses Brown, I was much pleased this evening in finding a letter from thee, as I fear'd a conveyance for my letter was too uncertain to get it to hand in season. I am glad to find thy approbation in our proceedings and that it will be assisted by the society. T Dawes Jr is engaged in the case (sincerely) he has now gone to N York and will consult the best Council there, to find if the State law will be any way superceded by the Federal Constitution. I have also engaged Chr'r Gore,[2] an Attorney much approved, who engages from principle, and assures me there is not an attorney in the State, who is not oppos'd to the traffic. I find all orders of men here are averse to it, and seem pleas'd with the effort to suppress it, except a few hot heads, one Sam Brown from your parts a principal, these have made a considerable noise, and have been very severe upon the Quakers and abolition Society. Sullivan is absent at Barnstable Court. I have left a state of the Case with S Eliot who will engage him in it. J. Lowell is also gone and would also be applied to but from a hope he will be app'td judge of the Federal Court is thou't best not to consult him as Councillor as his Candour would not admit of his afterward judging the Case, and if the prosecution continues its likely they may appeal to that Court.[3] No person can be more favourably disposed than himself.

[4] This note is added in a different hand from that of the body of the letter.

I have got from the Naval Office here a certificate of the Clearance, and inclose thee a list of the hands from the Book of clearances, that they may be known by the society and their disposition taken. The N Officer inquir'd the cause of my application, and offered every service in his way to prosecute the matter. I have not been able to find where the Owners lodged in Town, have had a person to make enquiry, who stopped on being cited to the Quakers who it was supposed had gained the knowledge but it will be easy to find who of them were here. . . . You will pursue the matter with diligence, and will take the deposition of a Capn. Smith just in from Martinico who was there when Stanton arrived.

I agree with thee in sentiment that its not the money that is the object and the prosecutor would willingly relinquish every Idea of pecuniary advantage, but I believe the Cause must be supported and carried to a length that will clearly convince those traders, they are fully in our power before any proposal of that kind be made, as it will be construed as apprehension we could not support the case.

An Israelite from Newport—M S[4] now in Town, has said, he wished to see the operation of this matter, if those persons who have associated and made a great noise, will step forth and shew themselves openly to oppòse the Trafic, and (I also infer) if the case should fail he might venture to engage [a]gain in it.

[2] Greater talent the abolitionists could scarcely have enlisted. Thomas Dawes, jr., was not long after made judge of the supreme court of Massachusetts; Christopher Gore was soon to become the first district attorney for Massachusetts, and later governor and United States senator. Both Gore and Dawes had been sitting in the Massachusetts convention which ratified the Federal Constitution.

[3] John Lowell was appointed United States judge for the district of Massachusetts not long after this.

[4] Moses Seixas (?).

The lawless advocates have pleased themselves with this expectation that when money come to be called for the prosecution would cease, but they have been informed, it will not be the least impediment.

I have engaged a person just going for Martinico, to procure a Certificate of the [torn] of the Vessel from there, should any [torn] they knowledge it will be well to [torn] likewise. . . . Brigs took out a Register in name of his Brother Thos Briggs I think of Pownall Preasant New York, and shew'd our Officer his instructions from him, for the last outfit. C Gore thinks we had best get some of our friends to make some enquiries of him to find if he has any knowledge or concern in the matter before he shall be inform'd by his brother, as I know not where to apply, I wish thou would take some step to find this.

And should thou gain any necessary knowledge please to communicate it to me, also to Thos. Dawes Junr or C Gore. I hope you will be able to get depositions from some of the hands which will substantiate the Fact.[5]

Newport November 18, 1789.

Dear Sir, . . . I learn that it is a question before the Society, or the committee, Whether any prosecutions shall be commenced against those whose vessels sailed on the slave trade, before the institution of the society; but since the law made in this State took place? It appears to me, and I believe to most of the members in this town, if not all, that if this question should be determined in the negative, the consequence will be very hurtful to the Society, if not fatal. The past neglect to prosecute, and the known hesitation respecting it, has had a great and apparent effect already. The slave traders are more bold and resolute to go on in the trade,[2] and entertain a low and contemptuous thought of the Society. And if the prosecutions in question should be finally droped, I am confident it will sink the Society in the view of the public in general, and we shall lose our influence, and the design of the institution will be, in a great measure defeated. I think that lenity, in this case, or any thing that looks like irresolution, neglect and dilatoriness, will fix a slur on the society which cannot easily be wiped off; but will sink it into discredit. . . .

[5] Rotch wrote in July that two sailors from the Hope had been summoned but that no information could be obtained from them. They were to be committed for contempt of court, and depositions were to be taken to prove Caleb Gardner's residence at the time of the brig's outfit. Gardner must, as a matter of fact, have been a member of the Rhode Island Assembly at about that time. For the further history of this case see post, no. 297.

Mr. Hart informs me that a number of Merchants in Norwich have lately gone into the slave trade. But it is under such cover that he knows not that such evidence of the fact can be obtained, as to afford ground for a legal prosecution. Perhaps time will bring forth evidence.

296. Benjamin Hadwen to Moses Brown, 1790.[1]

Newport 6 mo. 1790.

Respected Friend, Moses Brown, John B. Thurstin of this Town, who married Molly Denniss has had two offers to go Master of Slave Vessels to the Coast of Africa in C. Gardner and P. Clarkes employ but he is very much averse to the Business would be glad to get a birth as mate on board of a Merchantman but Says if he can't get any Such he is afraid he Shall be done there against his will he has been in John Williams Employ and gave Satisfaction but that Vessle is gone fishing, C G and P C are Continually importuing him to go but he is and all his friends are against it, if he can have a mate's birth at Providence and be diverted from an African Slave Voyage I shall think the pain I have Taken in Writing will be Well bestowed. Please let me know as Soon as possible in haste [2]

297. Case of the Hope, 1792.[1]

Gordon vs. Gardner and Others.

. . . The said action was entered at the Court of Common Pleas, at Taunton, in the County of Bristol, in Sept. 1789, and, on account of various objections from time to time made by the defendants to the formalities of the process, was continued to March, 1791, when it was tried.

[296] [1] Moses Brown Papers, VII. 21.

[2] While distilling and the slave trade were closely bound together during these years, not everyone concerned in the former was also engaged in the latter: "I presume you have been Acquainted that Francis Malbone is a Candidate for a Representative to Congress—his opponents may endeavor to prejudice the minds of many of the good People of this State against him as being friendly to the Slave Trade. Mr. Malbone since the War has and now is Concerned in a large Distillery and his Circumstances otherways favourable for prosecuting the Affrican Trade, but those leading motives with the addition of that powerfull Argument the prospect of much gain, have not been Sufficient to Induce him to be concerned in the Slave Trade." George Champlin to Moses Brown, Aug. 15, 1792, Moses Brown Papers, VIII. 4.

[297] [1] Salem Gazette, Jan. 24, 31, 1792. See T. C. Amory, Life of James Sullivan, II. 15-16, and ante, no. 68. Though the case was brought in Massachusetts it concerned a Rhode Island vessel and most of the individuals involved belonged to Rhode Island. It has therefore been placed with Rhode Island material.

Judge Howell, of Providence, President of the Abolition Society, opened the cause, and stated the case: that John Stanton was commander of the brigantine Hope;[2] and Caleb Gardner an owner: that in the spring of 1788, she was rigged, victualled and manned at Newport; then went to Boston, where she took in her cargo of rum, etc. which said Stanton and Gardner purchased just before at Medford, in person: that she cleared out at Boston for the Cape of Good Hope, but went to Africa, and took on board more than one hundred slaves, besides one born afterwards on the passage: that the said Stanton proceeded with them in said brigantine to the West Indies, performed quarantine for the smallpox, and then sold them for slaves. Judge Howell then read the various depositions in the case, clearly proving all the foregoing facts; and then applied the Act of the Commonwealth, which he said was an honor to Massachusetts, who indeed had in many instances offered an example for freemen: . . . The Defendants, he said, belonged to his own state; but he knew no distinctions favorable to place, when he was pleading the cause of humanity. . . . It was his opinion, he said, that were they to forfeit the whole sum of 50 l. for each unhappy victim to their avarice, and 200 l. for the vessel employed, it would be but justice according to the law, and infinitely less than they merited on the principle of natural equality. He enlarged on the particulars of the transaction; but said, as he could not tell what the defence would be, and as that defence would be answered by a gentleman engaged with him, who would close the case, he should leave it to a righteous jury of Massachusetts.

Mr. Channing (Att'y-General of Rhode Island) then opened the defence, and said, that he could not controvert the facts of fitting out the vessel for the purposes described in the writ, nor the fact of her really taking the 100 persons from the coast of Africa, and afterwards selling them for slaves in the West-Indies, in manner declared in the writ. One fact, however he should deny, viz. that the defendants were residents of Massachusetts when the crime was committed; and if even it should be found that they were residents, yet if they were not citizens, he should deny the authority of Massachusetts to controul their actions beyond the sea. He thought it hard, very hard, and illiberal, for this Commonwealth, to meddle with the actions or consciences of the people of Rhode island. It was quite enough that they were amenable to the laws of their own State. Rhode island had taken as good care of her citizens' conduct relative to the slave-trade as Massachusetts had—they had a similar Act, and it was almost copied by the one on which the present action was grounded. If Massachusetts were to take this money from his clients, the same thing might afterwards be done by Rhodeisland: For the vessel was fitted as much in the latter state as in the former; and in this way there might be no end to oppression. That a man should suffer only once for an offence was a doctrine he had never heard disputed: But a very different doctrine must be the result of a conviction of his clients in the present action. He was most sanguine, he said, that his defense was on strong and legal grounds. He did not know how the Jury might feel, he was sensible of a great influence against his clients—the action was nominally the action of Gordon, an individual—but it must be evident to all, who were the patrons of the suit—the number of the Society of Friends and of the Abolition Society, that always attended the cause at every term, shew clearly the real Plantiffs of the action. But his clients were not to be borne down. He inveighed against the constitutionality of the statute; and said, that such an one was never heard of before in any part of the globe. If it meant to controul the actions of a foreigner done in Africa or the West-Indies, because that foreigner once passed through Massachusetts, it was absurd, and so far could not be a law, but a dead letter. He apprehended, however, that the law did not really intend, by the word resident a Rhodeislander, who only touched at Boston to take in or purchase rum and depart; but that the word resident was tantamount to inhabitant; and upon this distinction the law might be better understood and carried into effect; and the inhabitants of each State controuled by their own, and not by a foreign legislation. He conceived, he said, that the same objections would go to the second as well as to the first count in the writ, so far as applied to mere residents; for even in the second count for the 200 l. the charge was not only the fitting out at Boston but the actual transporting slaves out of the jurisdiction of the commonwealth.

Mr. Channing was followed in his defence by Gov. Bradford,[3] of Rhode island who on the same side enlarged on the principles before stated. He went particularly into the evidence of his clients' residency at any time in Massachusetts; and dwelt long, with great force, on the danger there might be of a double conviction. He endeavored to demonstrate that however erroneous might have been the conduct of his clients, it would be infinitely better for society, that they should escape the forfeiture, than a doctrine be introduced, subversive of the safety of mankind. This would be doing wrong, that right might take place; this would be establishing the blacks in the present instance, but destroying the rights of both blacks and whites in all cases. He was for the rights of all. The Governor concluded with his usual candor and generosity of pleading and left the case to the jury, who he was sure would intend right in whatever verdict they might give.

Judge Dawes of Boston, then closed the cause for the Plaintiffs. He said it was now near nine o'clock at night, and he should consider the condition of the Court and Jury, who had been so long detained. He did not know what use it could be to the defendants to consider the Abolition Society as the actual Plaintiffs in this prosecution; it was surely not less meritorious on that account and indeed there was less suspicion that the money to be forfeited, was the object of the action. But be that as it may, there was a citizen named in the writ to whom the Law had given the right of action. The wisdom of the Legislature was conspicuous in this circumstance. They knew that what was every one's business was nobody's; And as the principles of humanity might not always be inducement sufficient to bring forward a prosecution; they have set avarice against avarice, and given half the forfeiture to any prosecutor. Though in the present case the plaintiff is not charged with such views, for the defendants say he is only the nominal prosecutor. To establish the Law was the object, not money. To demonstrate this, Mr. Dawes said he should not rely at all on the first count in the declaration which sought the forfeiture of five thousand pounds for the one hundred slaves, and in this he had the support of his client whoever it was. There were two counts: The first alledging that the defendants being only residents and not citizens of Massachusetts, transported slaves from Africa to the West Indies. He should not now consider the question whether the act could or could not controul them, being citizens of another State, for transporting those slaves beyond sea. For he relinquished that first count altogether—the second count in the writ charges those defendants, whilst resident at Boston, with fitting a vessel out for the Slave Trade, by which they forfeit two hundred pounds. On this he should rely, and had not a doubt of success. Much had been said against the merits of the Act. He should leave its merits to other people; as he himself when on the Boston seat, in the Legislation, had, on the request of the Abolition Society, who were now present, introduced the Act, being a copy of the Rhode-Island statute. For this deed he should at least never feel any compunction. As to the power of the Act to controul a Rhode-Islander, whilst at Boston, he thought no man in his senses could doubt. The Act names citizens, inhabitants, residents. The different qualities are clear. The law may punish the first for an act done both at home and abroad, the two last for crimes committed here whilst resident here. A foreigner coming to Taunton, and abiding only a minute or long enough to commit a theft there, is indictable and is called in such indictment, resident at Taunton. Allegiance is twofold, perpetual and temporary. The latter is what a foreigner owes to our laws while he is among us, be the time ever so short, and he owes it in return for the protection he receives at the same time. No lawyer will doubt this. The second count only charges a fitting out at Boston with an intention to transport slaves. It is true the law is careful that nothing shall be admitted as evidence of such intention but the fact of transporting and selling slaves afterwards in the same voyage. Now all this is proved, and the defendants are afterwards found here and prosecuted on the statute for an act they commenced when among us.

In answer to the other objection that the defendants might be in danger of double punishment, because they had fitted out in both States, Judge Dawes said, if this was true, they must thank their own folly for committing the crime twice. But he apprehended no difficulty on this head, because the only place of fitting was the port where the vessel and cargo were cleared out, and that was Boston.

He said the gentlemen who had spoken for the defendants had managed the case with great address, and had taken care to confess the principal facts of buying and selling the negroes in order to foreclose any observation, on the depositions to that point. He did not wonder they wanted to forget those depositions. The fact proved was a scandal to humanity—above a hundred of the human race, forced from their native shores, husbands from wives, parents from children —handcuffed, and fettered, and crammed into a ship's bottom, and what remained of them carried to the West Indies, after performing quarentine for the small pox, and sold for slaves, condemned to sup sorrow all their days one poor woman among the hundred delivered on the passage of a wretched infant, to add new cries to distress— her husband then in Africa, brooding on his family's woes, and imploring the judgment of Almighty God upon the Christians. But, he said, he should not enlarge, the case was one more in the catalogue of the African slave trade, though it was not so bad as one tried at Guild-Hall, in which case it appeared that the master of a ship selected a hundred and thirty-two of the most sickly of his slaves, and had them thrown to the sharks, in order to recover their value from the insurers.

The Hon. Walter Spooner, for the whole Court, then gave the case to the Jury, in a very impartial manner, and the Jury being about to withdraw, one of them stood up and said, I beg your Honor will tell me what is a resident? To which his Honor replied, "Friend, you are a resident here while sitting in that seat."

(The Jury then went out and soon agreed in their verdict, which was delivered into Court next morning, viz. That the Defendants, were indebted, according to the second count, the sum of two hundred pounds. From which the Defendants appealed to the Supreme Court.)

In October, 1791, at the Supreme Judicial Court at Taunton, the said action was heared on the said appeal, when Judge Dawes opened the cause for the Plaintiff, and stated the same evidence that had been heared at the Common Pleas, relying only on the second count in the writ: Mr. Channing and Governor Bradford then defended the action in the same ingenious and able manner as they had done in the Court below; after which the Attorney General of Massachusetts took upon him the close of this action.

The Attorney-General, Mr. Sullivan closed the cause on the part of the Plaintiffs, with as able and as elegant a speech as perhaps was ever heard at the bar of the Supreme Court. We cannot pretend to follow him through the vast variety, which his ingenuity and ardent and prolific imagination led him. Suffice it to say, that he amply refuted the arguments advanced on the other side. We cannot, however, refrain from stating a few ideas thrown out by that great Lawyer—who is an honor to his profession, and deserves the approbation of his country. He maintained, that if the defendants did not gain a residency, agreeably to the true intent and meaning of the statute, by fitting out their vessel at Boston, (the fitting out at Boston not being denied) and the accomplishment of the design intended by the fitting out, it would be in the power of any man to evade the force of the Act. It was very true, he said, that penal statutes ought in general to have a strict and rigid construction, But the statute on which the action in question was founded, very much differed from all other penal statutes so that the arguments adduced by the defendants counsel could not apply in the present case: For said he, an Act which was made to restrain the inordinent lusts of men—to prevent that havock and destruction, which reigns in one part of the globe—ought to have a more liberal construction—such a construction as to answer the purposes of the Legislature. The Jury, he further contended, ought not to be tender in finding the defendants guilty—and subject them to the forfeiture of the sum sued for—since their minds were so hardened against every feeling of humanity and compassion, as to throw hundreds of their fellow men into perpetual bondage and wretchedness; and since too they have made such a vast sum of money by the inhuman traffic.

The Court were unanimously of opinion, that the fitting out of the vessel at Boston, and afterwards proceeding on her voyage and the carrying into execution the original intent, viz. the obtaining of slaves —brought the defendants within the purview of the statute. They said that, as the facts were agreed to—the first question was—What was the design of the Legislature in making the statute? If it was to have the operation as stated by the defendant's counsel, the design of it would be defeated—for foreigners might fit out their vessels among us—our merchants be privately concerned and perhaps reap as much advantage from the barbarous traffic, as if the statute was not in being—and we should not be able to punish them because their being here, and their trading and fitting out their vessels from our ports, would not gain them a residency. Indeed the statute ought to be so construed as to effect the purposes for which it was made. When can a man be said to be a resident? The common acceptance of the word is, that when the place of a man's citizenship is not accurately known—and when he is transiently here and there—so that wherever he is, he may be said to be a resident of that place. This definition of a residency seems to comport with the common acceptation of the term, and is agreeable to the Law.

The Jury found the Defendants guilty and assessed two hundred pounds for the plaintiffs.

After which the Defendants' counsel moved an arrest of judgment, which is to be argued February term, at Boston.[4] suffered an uprising of his slaves in which several of them were killed. Salem Gazette, Jan. 28, 1794.

[299] [1] N. Y. Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI. The loose sheets from which these accounts are taken give no clue as to the dates of the two sales here included. A memorandum on the trade of the Ascension, on paper of 1878, states that between 1795 and 1798 the vessel was owned by Peleg Clark, Caleb Gardner, and William Vernon, and was commanded by Samuel Chace. The vessel cleared for Mozambique in November, 1795 (Newport Mercury, Nov. 3, 1795). The captain bought goods at Rotterdam and the Isle de France with which he purchased 283 slaves at Mozambique. These he sold at Buenos Aires. There is no evidence as to the source of the slaves sold at Havana, nor can it be ascertained whether the Havana sale was later or earlier than that at Montevideo. Captain Chace and his vessel were captured in 1798.

[2] How this figure was obtained is not evident. Subtracting the charges from the gross sales seems to leave $45266, three per cent. of which is $1357.98. However the maker of the accounts obtained $45325 and $163.70, he continued to use them.

Journal of a Voyage by Gods permission from Providence in the State of Rhode Island; towards Goree in Africa: on the Good Ship

[3] All the evidence points to a steadily growing trade with Cuba. On June 19, 1792, Captain Camplin (Champlin?) reported that he left behind him at Havana the Abeona, Smith, of Salem; the Willing Quaker, M'Neal of Boston; a snow under De Wolf of Rhode Island; the brig Sally, Sherman, of New York; the sloop Rebecca, Ryan of New London; and the schooner Peggy (Salem Gazette, May 22, 1792). To gain admission to Havana each of these vessels must have carried slaves.

Friday June 10th. Commences calm and pleasant. Loos'd Sails to dry etc. We was this morning informd by one of our Slaves that was not confined but on deck as a Sailor, that the Slaves had intentions of taking the Ship, and also advised by him to be on our guard. About 8 A.M. Capt. Henry went on Shore and also advised me to keep a good look out over the Slaves and when they come upon deck to Examine their Irons particularly. I first clear'd the booms of a number of Small Spars etc. took off the Rackings that they might not avail themselves of geting over the Barricade by the booms, also took off a number of bundles of hoops that lay across the boom. Every thing being clear on the Mn. deck, myself, Jacob Folger and John Jones took off the fore greating and Calld them up two by two as they were Ironed and Examined them, found all the legg Irons in good order, but halld about 5 or 6 Irons off they being too large. When they were all up but 6 or 8 I cast my eyes down the Ladder and saw a large strong Slave, with a naked legg Iron bolt in his hand, which I seizd, and endeavord to take from him, with all my strength but he held it in Spight of me, by that I perceivd his intentions were hostile. As they all gathered round us, and gave a loud Shout, at which I retreated for the Barricade door, looking behind me Just as I got to the Door and Saw the same Man Endeavoring to take a billet of wood that was under a pipe of wine for a quoin, by which means I escaped through the door and barrd it (having call'd to the Centinel to fire as soon as I began to Retreat and saw them after Folger and Jones) as soon as the door was bard I mounted the platform aft of the barricade and directly saw one of them in pursuit of Jones with the bott of a legg Iron in his hand, but He nimbly escaped by the boom and the Barricade but Folger was sadly wounded with thier Iron about the head and would have been Murdered had it not been for our muskets (5 of Which was fired Blunderbust) Folger hove himself down the Mn. hatch way by which he escaped.

In the interim about 12 of them came and placed thier backs against the Barricade and the door, as though they had an Intention to force it but, in so awkard a manner I cannot Judge, If that was their intention or not, by brandishing the breeches of our Muskets they retreated forward and Cordially went below (I having orderd the firing to cease almost as soon as I got on the platform). The Portugues Capt. came onboard by this time, with about 20 armd men and others, and we opened the Grating and brought them up half dozen or so at once, and among the whole found 20 or thier about had entirely got their Irons off. They having broke down the bulk head between the Sailors Apartment and themselves and came up throuth the fore Scuttle upon our backs. After all was confined and put below We found thier was Missing two of which was seen to Jump overboard and was presently drown'd, one was Shot dead, and one Sick one trampled to death in the fray and four wounded two of which pretty dangerously. [2] The Hope and the Fair Eliza entered from Havana on Mar. 27 and Nov. 6, 1798; the Liberty from Africa on May 1.

[3] The Juno, the Chance, and the Eliza entered from Havana on Mar. 12 and 19, and May 14, 1799, the Liberty from Africa Apr. 9. The Liberty was probably a whaling vessel rather than a slaver.

[4] The Ranger entered from Havana Aug. 13, 1799; the Fair Eliza on June 17, 1800.

302. Captain Jeremiah Diman to Captain James De Wolf, 1796.[1]

St. Thomas, April 1, 1796.

Captain James De Wolf:

This will inform you of my arrival in this port safe, with seventy-eight well slaves. I lost two on my passage. I had sixty-two days

[5] Occasionally the government glanced toward this trade. On Nov. 16, 1799, Timothy Pickering wrote to John Morton, Esq., who was consul of the United States at Havana: "Your situation will doubtless put it in your power to discover many vessels contravening the laws and in such case be pleased to send on the fullest information respecting them that you can collect." Mass. Hist. Soc., Pickering Papers, 12: 35D.

[302] [1] W. H. Munro, History of Bristol, Rhode Island (Providence, 1880), pp. 350-351. The original of this letter, which Munro says was "furnished for publication in the Phoenix five or six years ago by the son of the writer," has not been located. Mark Anthony De Wolf of Guadeloupe served as supercargo for Simeon Potter, a Bristol slave captain, and, marrying Potter's sister Abigail, settled in Bristol. James, the most famous of his eight sons, was not the only one to enter upon the slave trade. William, Charles, passage. I received your letter and orders to draw bills on thirty days' sight, but I have agreed to pay in slaves—two men slaves at twenty-eight Joes, and one boy at twenty-five Joes and another at twenty Joes.

I found times very bad on the coast. Prime slaves are one hogshead and thirty gallons of rum or seven Joes gold, and boys one hogshead of rum. I left Captain Isaac Manchester at Anemebue with ninety slaves on board, all well. To-morrow I shall sail for Havana, agreeable to your orders. I shall do the best I can, and without other orders load with molasses and return to Bristol.

303. Protest of the Orange, 1799.[1]

Bahama Islands ss.

By this Public Instrument of Protest, Be it known and made manifest; That on this Day being Thursday the fourth Day of April in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Ninety Nine, Before me Vincent Mathews Notary and Tabellion Public by lawful Authority duly admitted and sworn, residing and dwelling at the Town of Nassaw in the Island of New Providence, personally came and appeared Freemen Mayberry Master, John Bigley and Peter Castloff Mates and Nathaniel Lyndon, Job Austen and James Pollock Seamen of and belonging to the Brigantine Orange of New Port, who being severally and respectively duly sworn, upon the Holy Evangelist of Almighty God, did testify, depose, narrate, and declare respectively, as follows, to wit:

John, and possibly other brothers were at one time or another commanders or owners of slavers. The Sally, William De Wolf, delivered a rum cargo and received a cargo of slaves on the African coast in 1792 (N. Y. Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI.). In a voyage of 1791, on the passage from Africa to Havana, one of the women of the cargo was stricken with smallpox, whereupon the captain, James De Wolf, was said to have thrown her overboard. A Newport grand jury found a bill of murder against him, but he had already left the state and the matter seems to have been dropped (Salem Gaette, July 5, 1791). Mark Anthony De Wolf Howe quotes a letter of Dec. 22, 1794, from Simeon Potter to James De Wolf in which the writer explains in strict confidence how vessels could be fitted out for the forbidden trade at home rather than in the West Indies (Bristol, pp. 72-73). Howe also relates (pp. 82-83) the story of Samuel Bosworth, the Bristol collector, who attempted to buy in for the government the Lucy and Eliza, condemned for trading in slaves. With the connivance of Charles Collins, commander of the Lucy (which was owned by Charles De Wolf), Bosworth was kidnapped and carried several miles from the scene of the auction. Not long after, Collins became collector of the port (Perry, Charles D'Wolf, pp. 27-28). Many years later James De Wolf became a member of the United States Senate and during his election a newspaper controversy rose over the charge that he had made his fortune in the slave traffic. After his election, but before he took his seat in the Senate, William Smith of South Carolina charged that of the fifty-nine Rhode Island vessels carrying slaves to Charleston between 1800 and 1804 ten had belonged to De Wolf (Annals of Congress, 16 Cong., 2 sess., pp. 72-73). Jeremiah Diman, the writer of the letter, was a nephew of De Wolf, the son of Margaret, one of the seven daughters of Mark Anthony De Wolf, and of Joseph Diman.

[303] [1] N. Y. Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI.

That they sailed from the Port of New Port, in Rhode Island, on or about the sixteenth Day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety Eight on a Voyage to the Coast of Africa, for the purpose of purchasing Slaves, and from thence to proceed to the Port of Havana, in the Island of Cuba, That on or about the twenty third Day of January, following, they arrived at Isle De Los, on the Coast aforesaid, where they purchased and took on board one hundred and twenty Slaves, with whom they proceeded on or about the twenty third Day of February following for the aforesaid Port of Havana. That nothing remarkable occurred except the Death of one Slave until the twenty sixth Day of March last past when about ten OClock at Night of the same Day the said Brigantine struck upon a Reef about three Miles to the Eastward of Man of War Key—near the Island of Abaca one of the Bahama Islands, That upon first striking, she beat nearly over the Reef and then struck fast whereupon they started seventy Casks of Water, and threw overboard all their wood together with the Camboose, but found no good effect arise from it, in consequence of which, during the night, and the next morning, they landed Eighty Slaves and upwards, after which the Sloop Two Brothers of Abaca aforesaid commanded by David Malone came to their assistance, That the aforesaid David Malone, took on board the said Sloop Thirty nine Slaves, and, carried out two Anchors within the Reef, by which means with the aid of the Crew of the Sloop, they hove the said Brigantine off and proceeded for this Island of New Providence in a very leaky state in company with the said sloop and arrived here yesterday Evening. That having arrived and examined the said Brigantine they find her bilged in several Places her Plank started from the Timbers and one Ball broken, so as to render it impossible to proceed upon their first intended voyage without suffering great loss and delay.[2]

Whereupon the said Master doth require of me the Notary to protest. I the Notary do therefore at the request aforesaid by these presents for and in behalf of the said Master, and of the Owners, Freighters, Shippers, Insurers and all others concerned in the said Brigantine called the Orange and her Cargo aforesaid, Formally and Solemnly Protest against the said Reef Rocks or Shoal for all Losses, Damages, Costs, Charges and expences, had, born, Suffered and sustained by the said Parties Protesting or any of them for or by reason or on account of the Premisses herein before narrated and deposed to, or any of them. Thus done and Protested at Nassaw in the Island of New Providence aforesaid. . . .

[2] Signed, Freeman Maberry, John Bigley, Peter Castloff, Nathaniel Lyndon, Job Austin, and James Pollock.

Afterwards, to wit upon this Day being Wednesday the seventeenth Day of April aforesaid; the said Freeman Mayberry being further sworn did depose and declare that having further examined the said Brigantine Orange they find, her main mast, main Top gallant Mast, and cross jack yard all Sprung that the Salvage of the said Brigantine and Cargo having been left to be ascertained by Persons mutually chosen hath been awarded at the Sum of one thousand Dollars and hath accordingly been paid out of the Proceeds of the said Brigantine and Cargo. Wherefore I the Notary at the request of the said Master do protest as before.[3]

NEWPORT June 7 1800.

Mr. Nathaniel Lawrence, We received your favor of 4 Ins and have made enquiry of our officers relative to the Insurance you are desirous of having effected; but they do not incline to write on the risk you mention nothing having been done here on African Vessels and Cargoes since the last Act of Congress [2] interdicting that trade.

[3] The claim made against the underwriters by Captain Mayberry was for $3472.72. The brig was valued at $3000, the 120 slaves purchased in Africa, at $120 a head, or $12,000. N. Y. Hist. Soc., Slavery MSS., box VI.

May 10, 1800 (Statutes at Large, II. 70-72). At this time the Rhode Island representatives were Christopher G. Champlin and John Brown. Champlin does not seem to have voted upon the bill. Brown not only cast one of the five votes against it but spoke against it as well, in all probability expressing the prevailing feeling among the interested Rhode Island merchants. "Mr. J. Brown said, when the motion was first laid on the table, he thought it improper to prevent the citizens of the United States enjoying the benefits of a trade enjoyed by all the European nations. He really was in hopes that the good sense of the select committee would have permitted them to have seen the policy of realizing the act in question. Many members of the House, he observed, knew how the former act [1794] was passed; they knew that Congress was drilled into it by certain persons who would not take no for an answer. It was well known that the Abolition Society, otherwise the Society of Friends, as they were called, were very troublesome until they got that act passed. It was also well known that those people did not do much to support the Government, but that they did as much as they could to stop the measures of the Government and particularly our defensive system, on which our national security depended. . . . He was certain that this nation having an act against the slave trade did not prevent the exportation of a slave from Africa. He believed we might as well, therefore, enjoy that trade as to leave it wholly to others. It was the law of that country to export those whom they held in slavery—who were as much slaves there as those who were slaves in this country—and with as much right. The very idea of making a law against this trade, which all other nations enjoyed, and which was allowed to be very profitable, was ill policy. He could further say that it was wrong, when considered in a moral point of view, since by the operation of the trade, the very people themselves much bettered their condition. It ought to be a matter of national policy, since it would bring in a good revenue to our Treasury. . . . Mr. B. said our distilleries and manufactories were all lying idle for want of an extended commerce. He had been well informed that on those coasts New England rum was much preferred to the best Jamaica spirits, and would fetch a better price. Why then should it not be sent there, and a profitable return be made? Why should a heavy fine and imprisonment be made the penalty for carrying on a trade so advantageous." [2] On Mar. 12 Gibbs and Channing wrote to their Cuban correspondents, Messrs. While there is in the letter no mention of slaves the chances are that they constituted the vessel's cargo. It apparently belonged to Easton and Price of Newport. A part of the rum cargo with which it had sailed from Newport to Africa had been provided by Gibbs and Channing. Letter-Book, no. 64.

Appellants Case

This Vessel, under American Colours, sailed from Bristol, in the State of Rhode Island, on the 24th of July, 1806, with a Cargo of Rum, Brandy, Gin, Wine, English Goods, etc. cleared out for Cape Coast Castle, where the Vessel arrived in September following, and the Master disposed of Part of the Cargo, and purchased Slaves, and traded up and down the Coast disposing of his cargo, and with the Proceeds purchasing Slaves, at the several Factories; the Vessel sailed from Acra on the 15th November following with Slaves, bound to Monte Video, and was captured in the River La Plata, on the 6th of January, 1807, (the Port of Monte Video being then under Blockade) by His Majesty's Ship of War Leda, Robert Honyman Esq. Commander, in Sight of His Majesty's Ship Daphne and others, and carried to the Cape of Good Hope, where the usual Proceedings were instituted on Behalf of the Captors against the Vessel and Cargo as Prize.

15th June.

A Claim of Jonathan Dennison, the Master, was given for the Vessel and Cargo, as the Property of James D. Wolff, of Bristol, in Rhode Island, a Citizen of the United States of America.

26th August.

The Cause came on for Hearing before the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, at the Cape of Good Hope, when the Claimant's Proctor brought in an Attestation of Jonathan Dennison, with an Exhibit, which the Judge directed to be admitted, and after hearing the Arguments of Counsel, directed the Cause to stand over.

31st August.

The Judge having maturely deliberated, assigned both Parties to exhibit Proof as to the Nature and Extent of the Blockade of Monte Video, and also as to the Nature of the Settlement at Cape Mount,[2] within Seven Days.

The Affidavit and Exhibit brought in by the Claimant's Proctor on the 26th of August, are as follow.

Affidavit of Jonathan Dennison, the Master, sworn 15th July, 1807, in which he deposes, That the Paper annexed was given by Charles B. Whitehead to Deponent, in case he fell in with a British Cruizer, and that on his being detained by the Leda he gave said Paper Writing or Letter to Captain Honyman, who returned the same to Deponent.

The Paper annexed to this Affidavit is as follows.

BRITISH ACRA, Coast of Africa, 14th Nov. 1806.

These are to certify, that Captain Dennison, of the American Ship Ann, belonging to Rhode Island, and now bound to the River Plate, did the greatest Part of his Business in Africa with L. T. Hebut, Esq. of Lagoe, a British Settlement, and with the Undersigned, also residing at a British Settlement in Africa, and that both L. T. Hebut and the Undersigned, are British Subjects and Natives of England.

Witness my Hand.

(Signed) CHARLES B. WHITEHEAD.[3]

Claimants Affidavits

Affidavit of Merrit Bates, late Master of the Juno, then lying in Simon's Bay, sworn 9th September, 1807, in which he deposes, that he has made Three Voyages to Cape Mount, on the Coast of Africa, and that no Factory, except the English, was established there, or on that Part of the Coast.

[2] From the deposition of Captain Dennison (ans. 27) one learns that the customs officer in Bristol had written Cape Mount in the invoice as the destination of the cargo, and had then altered it to Cape Coast. This may explain the interest of the judge in Cape Mount.

[3] The captor's proctor also brought in affidavits to the facts of the seizure.

Affidavit of William Bisset, Master of the Experiment, then lying in Table Bay, to the same Effect as the preceeding Affidavit, and sworn on the same Day. . . .[4]

21st Sept. 1807.

The Cause came on for final hearing, when the Judge restored the Ship and Cargo upon Payment of the Captor's Expences.

From this Sentence the Captor's Proctor immediately prayed and was allowed an Appeal, and the Claimant's Proctor also prayed an Appeal from the Payment of Expences.

Both Appeals have been consolidated and assigned for Sentence before your Lordships, and the Evidence in the Cause is as follows:

Preparatory Examinations

[Deposition of Jonathan Dennison, Master.][5]

To the 3d Interrogatory, That the Ship was taken in the River Plata on the 6th of January last, but for what Reason he is unable to set forth.

4th. That he was Master of the Ship; was appointed to the Command by James DeWolff, Merchant, resident at Bristol, in the State of Rhode Island; that he took Possession of the Ship at Bristol about Three Years since.

7th. That she had a Passport, Sea Brief, and Mediterranean Pass on board, which were obtained from the Custom-House at Bristol by James De Wolf; that her last Voyage began at Bristol, and was to have ended there; that she sailed from thence on the 24th July, 1806, with an assorted Cargo, consisting chiefly of Rum, together with Brandy, Gin, Wine, and English Goods, and India Prize Goods, and 80 Hogsheads of Salt for Ballast,[6] cleared out for Cape Coast, where the vessel arrived on the 12th of September, where Deponent disposed of Part of the Cargo, and purchased Slaves; that he traded up and down the Coast disposing of his Cargo, and with the Proceeds purchasing Slaves at the several Castles or Territories, and sailed from Acra on the 15th of November following with Slaves obtained on the said Coast, together with Goods therein enumerated, bound to Monte Video.[7]

[4] The remaining affidavits relate to the seizure.

[5] Dennison deposed that he was born in Providence, R. I., and that he had lived there for the last seven years save when at sea.

[6] The certificate signed by the collector and the surveyor of the port of Bristol stated that the rum was of De Wolf's own manufacture. The outward cargo was valued at $25,754.45.

[7] A considerable portion of the ship's log while on the coast is printed among the papers in the appendix to the brief. The Ann found Captains Drown and Brooks at Anamabo on Oct. 6, and on the 8th she spoke the ship Union of Newport.

9th. That the said James De Wolff was the sole Owner of the said Ship.[8]

11th. That the Slaves were Natives of Africa, called Zanteen [Fanteen] Slaves.

12th. That James De Wolff was the Lader of Part of the Cargo laden on board at Bristol; that Deponent shipped the Slaves, 163 in Number, on the Gold Coast of Africa; that Deponent was the Consignee of the Goods; that the whole of the Cargo was to be delivered at Monte Video, for the real Account, Risk, and Benefit of James De Wolff.

20th. That if the Cargo had arrived at Monte Video, it's destined Port, he should have disposed of the same, as the Consignee, for the real, Account, Risk, and Benefit of the aforesaid James De Wolff.

29th. That the Ship was steering towards Monte Video at the Time she was seized and taken; that her Course was at all Times, when the Weather would permit, directed to the said Port; that her Course was not altered upon the Appearance of the Vessel by which she was taken in the River Plata about Ten or Twelve Miles from Monte Video. . . . .

[Deposition of Daniel Shaw, the Mate.][9]

7th. That her last Voyage began at Bristol, from whence she sailed to the Gold Coast of Africa; that she arrived on the said Coast at Almina, with a Cargo consisting of Rum, etc.; that the Master disposed of the greatest Part of the Cargo on the said Gold Coast of Africa, and with the Produce thereof purchased Slaves; that the Vessel then sailed from Acra, having the remainder of the Cargo undisposed of, and 163 Slaves, bound to Monte Video.

9th. That James De Wolff was the sole Owner of the Ship.

11th. That the Slaves were shipped at different Places on the Gold Coast of Africa, but principally at Acra.

12th. That to the best of his Knowledge and Belief James De Wolff was the Lader of the Goods on board the Ship; and that the Master is the Consignee thereof; and that a Mr. Hohard and a Mr. Whitehead, at Acra, were the Shippers of the Slaves; that the Master was the Consignor thereof; that James De Wolff is the sole Owner of the said Goods and Slaves; that the said Goods and Slaves were to be delivered at Monte Video. . . .[10]

[8] The Ann was of 310 tons, and had twenty-one mariners, including the captain. All the crew had been shipped at Bristol by De Wolf.

[9] Shaw was born in Warren, Mass. He had lived ten years in Boston and two years in Bristol, R. I.

[10] Milton Mann Richmond, Solomon Pike, and John O'Neil, seamen, also testified to the facts of the voyage. Richmond stated that the vessel delivered part of her cargo at Elmina and the remainder of it at Acra. She returned to Elmina for part of her slave cargo, and took on the last of it at Acra. O'Neal testified that the Ann had already made one voyage from Bristol to Africa and Montevideo, then back to Bristol.

Letter of Instructions, dated 18th July, 1806, from James De Wolff to the Master.[11]

You having engaged to go a Voyage to Africa in my Ship Ann, my Instructions are, that you proceed with all possible Dispatch direct to Cape Coast, and make Trade at that Place and its Vicinity, and purchase as many good healthy young Slaves as it may be in your Power to purchase, by bartering away your present Cargo with the Natives; and, after completing your Business in Africa, you will proceed to Monte Video in South America, and there dispose of your Slaves, and purchase a Return Cargo of Ox Hides and dryed Beef, and some Tallow and other Produce of that Country, such as you may judge will pay a handsome Profit; and after completing your Business there, you will return home to this Port with all possible Dispatch. . . .

The Consolidated Appeal now comes on for Hearing; and it is humbly hoped, on the Part of the Appellant, that your Lordships will be pleased to pronounce for the Appeal, reverse the Sentence appealed from, and condemn the Ship and Cargo as Prize to the Captor, and otherwise affirm the Sentence, and condemn the Respondent in the Costs of the Appeal, for the following, among other

REASONS

Because the Vessel, was at the Time of Capture, prosecuting a Voyage to the Colony of the Enemy, in violation of the prohibitory Laws of America for the Abolition of the Slave Trade, and is not therefore within the Provisions of the Order of the 24th of June, 1803.[12]

Because, independent of that prohibitory Law, the Voyage commencing at Elmina, a Dutch Settlement on the Coast of Africa, and destined to Monte Video, was illegal.

Because that Destination was pursued in violation of the Blockade of Monte Video, then existing.

[11] This is among the ship's papers, which include certificates from the port of Bristol, invoice of cargo, bill of lading, muster-roll, letter of instructions, register, and log.

[12] "In consideration of the present state of commerce, we are pleased hereby to direct the commanders of our ships of war and privateers not to seize any neutral vessel which shall be carrying on trade directly between the colonies of enemies, and the neutral country, to which the vessel belongs, and laden with the property of inhabitants of such neutral country: provided, that such neutral vessels shall not be supplying, nor shall have, on the outward voyage, supplied the enemy with any articles contraband of war, and shall not be trading with any blockaded port." American State Papers: Foreign Relations, III. 265.

From the Sentence of the Court below, the Captors and Claimants have prosecuted their respective Appeals. The usual Procedings have been had therein in this Court, the Appeals have been assigned for Sentence, and the same now come on for Hearing; and it is humbly hoped, on the Part of the Claimant, that your Lordships will pronounce against the Appeal of the Captors, and affirm the Sentence with Costs, so far as the same restores the Ship and Cargo, and pronounce for the Appeal of the Claimant, and reverse the Sentence, so far as the same rejects the Prayer of the Claimant for Costs and Damages, and subjects the Ship and Cargo to the Payment of Captor's Expences, and to condemn the Captors in Costs and Damages for the following amongst other

REASONS

Because the Ship and Cargo most clearly appeared to belong to the American Citizen for whom they are claimed, and were engaged in lawful Trade, and there was no just Reason, for the Capture and Detention.

312. THE CASE OF THE NANCY, 1807.[1]

Before the Most Noble and Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Appeals in Prize Causes.

The Schooner Nancy, Joshua Viale, Master.

The said Joshua Viale, the Master and Claimant of the said Schooner, and Sixty-five Slaves laden therein, on Behalf and as the Property of Messrs. Phillips and Gardner, of the City of Charleston, in North America, Merchants, Citizens of the United States } Appellant.

Against

William Selby, Esq. Commander of His Majesty's Ship of War Cerberus, and Lieutenant George Bligh, Commander of the hired armed Schooner Venus, the Captors of the said Ship and Cargo } Respondents.

(On an Appeal from the Vice-Admiralty Court at Tortola.)

Appellant's Case.

This American Schooner, laden with Slaves, and being in Prosecution of a Voyage from Senegal to Charleston, was seized and detained on the 1st Day of November, 1807, by his Majesty's Ship of War Cerberus, William Selby, Esq. Commander, and his Majesty's hired armed Schooner Venus, Lieutenant George Bligh, Commander, and carried to Tortola, where a Libel was filed against the Schooner and Cargo.

A Claim was given by the Master for the Schooner, and sixty-five Slaves, on behalf of John Phillips and John Gardner, of Charleston, Merchants, Citizens of the United States of America.

Preparatory Examinations

Deposition of Joseph Viale, the Master.[2]

To the Third Interrogatory this Deponent saith, That the Capture was made about five Leagues to the Northward of St. Thomas's, on Sunday last, the First Day of the present Month, as he believes; does not know upon what Pretence it was done; that he was in Distress, and asked for Assistance from the Tender he fell in with; that all his Hands, as also himself, were sick, except two; that one of them died; that the Tender put an Officer and five Men on board, and ordered the Schooner for Tortola, where she was conducted, and arrived on the Monday Evening following; she sailed under American Colours, and had none others on board.

4. That he was appointed to the Command by Phillips and Gardner, of Charleston; that he first took Possession of her at Rhode Island, in the Month of October of last Year; John Davis, of that Place, the then Owner, delivered him the Possession; that Phillips and Gardner afterwards bought the said Schooner, in the Month of June last, and continued Deponent in the Possession.[3]

6. That neither himself nor any of the Officers or Mariners have any Share or Interest in the Schooner or her Cargo; that Manuel Joseph, one of the Crew, owns two Boy Slaves as his Privilege, and William, one other of the Crew (does not recollect his Sur-Name), owns a Man Slave as his Privilege also.

7. That she was built in Pennsylvania; she sailed from Charleston, on the present Voyage, the 1st Day of June last, or thereabouts,

[2] Captain Viall (Viale) testified that he was born at Warren, R. I., that he had lived there six years out of the preceding seven and one year in Charleston, and that he considered Rhode Island his home. The Nancy was 106 tons burden, and was navigated by nine sailors. It was valued at $4000 but had been purchased by the present owners for $2000. The complete statements of the deponents are given in the appendix to the brief.

[3] According to the American register, dated June 4, 1807, the owners were John Gardner and John C. Phillips. The second mate testified that Phillips had lived in Newport, R. I., before coming to Charleston.

laden with Provisions and some Lumber,[4] to the Amount of about 4000 Dollars, and he had also besides 6000 Dollars in Cash; cleared out for Africa; that he arrived at Senegal about the 1st Day of August following; he there sold the Lumber and Provisions, and with the Proceeds and the Cash he carried, purchased to the Number of about eighty Slaves as the Cargo; that they averaged as near as he can judge, about 125 Dollars a-piece; that Manuel Joseph and William purchased the three privileged Slaves above-mentioned, out of Money they carried, and with their Wages Deponent advanced them; that they took their Departure from Senegal on the 30th Day of September last, bound back to the Port of Charleston, where the Voyage commenced, and was to have ended; that the Slaves have several Times risen on the Crew, with an Attempt to take the Vessel; that to the Number of about three have been killed in subduing them, and one besides jumped over board; four died of Sickness, about that Number at present sick; that about ten Days after they sailed from Senegal his Crew began to be sick, so much so as to prevent their proceeding for their destined Port, he therefore bore away for the West Indies, with a Determination of going to the first Port most convenient to make; that on Friday, the 30th Day of October, they discovered the high Lands of Spanish Town, and bore away for the first Port; that St. Thomas being the most convenient, he intended to have gone in there at the Time of the Capture; that he there meant to have taken in other Hands, to enable him to proceed on his Voyage to Charleston; that Deponent has made one other Voyage, besides the present, in the said Schooner, when she was owned by John Davis, of Rhode Island; it commenced there in the Month of October of last Year, laden with Lumber and Provisions, to the Amount of about 7000 Dollars, including Rum and Tobacco, which also composed the said Cargo; that he went with the same to Senegal, where he sold, and purchased about fifty Slaves, in return for the said Cargo; that when he went out he had verbal Orders from Mr. Davis to proceed to Charleston with the Slaves from Senegal; that he accordingly did so, and on his Arrival at Charleston, finding no Orders there from [4] In Captain Viall's attestation in support of claim on the appeal he stated that the outward cargo consisted of "1200 Feet of Lumber, 12 Casks of Rice, 14 Barrels of Flour, 10 Barrels of Beef, 40 Barrels of Bread, 12 Boxes Spermaceti Candles, 4 Hogsheads of Rum, 12 Barrels of Sugar, 10 Barrels of Molasses, 4 Kegs Butter, 10 Boxes Claret, 40 Boxes Herrings, 6 Half Barrels Crackers, 1 Hogshead of Hams, 50 Boxes Segars, 12 Barrels Loaf Sugar, and 2 Bales of Dry Goods, and also 6000 Dollars in Specie." The bill of lading corrects certain of his items: 11,286 feet of lumber, 20 barrels rice, 15 barrels flour, 5 barrels pork, 12 barrels molasses, 40 hams, 14 barrels loaf sugar, 10 barrels brown sugar, 1 crate ware, 40 reams paper, 5 quarter chests hyson tea, 12 boxes claret wine, 4 ditto fruits in brandy, 1 hhd. cod fish, 6 kegs Dutch butter, 2 boxes containing 200 dozen handkerchiefs, 54 strings of beads, 76 barrels of bread, 8 half barrels crackers, 20 barrels beef, 4 hhds. rum, 44 boxes herring, 3 barrels sugar.

the said Owner, he consigned himself to Phillips and Gardner, who sold about thirty of the Slaves; that afterwards the said Davis wrote to him from Rhode Island, that he was to consign himself to Christian and De Wolfe,[5] Merchants at Charleston; that he accordingly applied to them, and they sold the Remainder of the said Slaves; that the said Davis also wrote to them, advising them thereof; that Davis, in the said letter to Christian and De Wolfe, authorized them to sell the said Schooner, and wrote also to advise Deponent of the same; that they accordingly sold her, and Phillips and Gardner became the Purchasers; that the above are the only Voyages he has been upon in the present Vessel; that the said Schooner is at present under the Direction and Management of Phillips and Gardner, her now Owners, as to her Employment in Trade; he has never as yet corresponded with them on the Concerns of the said Vessel, or her Cargo, or with any other Person.

8. That the outward Lading consisted of Flour, Hams, Beef, Bread, Lumber, and a few trifling Articles of Dry Goods, as also 6000 Dollars in Cash; and that the present Lading consisted of sixty-five or seventy Slaves, including three privileged ones; that he forgot before to mention that the Mate had also a Girl Slave, as Privilege, which he purchased with his own Money he carried out; believes he bought her for sixty or seventy Dollars; that the said Slaves were taken on board from about the 1st of September, to the last Day of the said Month.

9. That John Phillips and John Gardner were the sole Owners of the Schooner when taken; he knows them to be the Owners from their purchasing her of Christian and De Wolfe, who were authorized by John Davis, the former Owner, to sell her; that the said Owners are Americans by birth, born in the State of Rhode Island, where they always lived, till about five or six Years ago, they removed to Charleston, South Carolina, where they have since lived and carried on Business as Merchants; that the said Owners are Citizens of the United States.

10. That Christian and De Wolfe, as the Agents of John Davis, made the present Bill of Sale to the said Phillips and Gardner, of the Schooner; believes it is dated some Time in May last; it was made at Charleston; believes it to be in Possession of the said Phillips and Gardner.

12. That Deponent was the Lader of the Cargo, and Phillips and Gardner above named, are the sole Owners and Consignees of the same, and it was to be delivered at Charleston on their real Account, [5] Charles Christian and Henry De Wolf. Captain Vaill wrote to Davis from Charleston, on Apr. 25, 1807, stating that after a passage of eight (?) days from Senegal he had arrived with 59 slaves, who would, he thought, average $280.

Risk, and Benefit; that he had no Orders from them, or any other Person, to proceed to any other Port;[6] that he has no Interest whatever in the said Cargo; that he does take upon himself to swear that at the Time of the lading the present Cargo, now, and if it shall be restored and unladen at the destined Port of Charleston aforesaid, it does and will belong to the said Phillips and Gardner, and to no other; that the said Cargo is the Returns of the Goods and Money carried out shipped and owned by them; that Deponent is to derive a Commission of 10 per Cent. on the Sale of the Slaves at Charleston, in lieu of every Thing else.

13. That no Bills of Lading were signed for the present Cargo.[7]

20. That in case the said Schooner had arrived at her destined Port of Charlston, and the Cargo been there unladen, it would have remained the Property of the said Phillips and Gardner until sold; they were to have taken the Chance of the Market for the Sale of the said Slaves.

26. That there was one Passenger, [h]is Sirname is Bartholomew; believes him to be an American; knows not his Rank, Profession, or Occupation, or if he had any Commission; he came on board at Senegal somewhere about the latter End of September last; he went out there from Charleston in an American Vessel, and he was on his return to Charleston; knows not his Business; he has two Slaves, one Male and a Female, on Freight, which he includes in the Number mentioned; he has no Property or Concern in the Vessel or the Rest of the Slaves.

29. That the said Schooner after leaving Senegal, steered her Course for Charleston, until about 10 Days ago he ran down his Latitude for the West India Islands; that from Senegal he steered West when the Winds would permit; that they were light and variable till he got to the Cape de Verde Islands, when he got into the Trades, and sometimes steered West and by North, and West and by South, and steered much the same Course when he made Spanish Town; her Course was not altered upon the Appearance of the Man of War's Tender, it was at all Times directed for Charleston when the Wind and Weather would permit, until he altered it for the West India Islands to make the first Port he could to procure fresh and able

[6] The letter of instructions contains the following: "on your Arrival at Africa you will endeavour to dispose of your Cargo on the best possible Terms and vest the Proceeds in such Articles as will best suit this Market, and return with all possible Dispatch to this Port; you will be particularly mindful to leave the Coast timely (allowing double Passage) to arrive at this Port previous to the 31st December next."

[7] The slaves had all been taken on board at Senegal during the months of August and September. The captain also testified that insurance had been placed on vessel and cargo, at Charleston, from Charleston to Africa, and back to Charleston, to be void after Dec. 31, 1807. He did not know the premium.

Hands to enable him to proceed to his destined Port of Charleston aforesaid.

N.B. The Master having been ill while under Examination on the standing Interrogatories, made an Affidavit to the following Effect the Day after his Examination, to correct his Deposition, viz.

That he was yesterday examined on the standing Interrogatories; that he then was, is, and for some Time past has been in a bad State of Health, and at Times very imperfect in his Recollection; that considering what passed on his said Examination, he is apprehensive that he stated the Cargo of Slaves on board the said Vessel, with the Exception of some few priviledged Slaves, to have been the Property of Phillips and Gardner of Charleston; whereas the Fact is, that 10 were shipped by one La Coste a Frenchman, on Freight at 40 Dollars a Head to be sold for the Account of the said La Coste, and the Proceeds to remain for him with the said Phillips and Gardner; that one of the said Slaves on Freight jumped overboard, having rose, with others, on the White Crew of the said Vessel, and was drowned; that the other nine are still on board forming Part of the Cargo, and were originally marked with a bit of Lead round their Necks, which the Deponent apprehends may have been removed; that he can however notwithstanding from Recollection still point the surviving nine Slaves out; that Deponent thinks it his Duty to come forward to give the present Explanation to prevent Inconvenience as far as he can to the Parties actually interested in the Residue of the said Cargo.

Deposition of Thomas Bartholomew, a Passenger

To the First Interrogatory, That he was born near the City of Lyons in France; he has lived in New York, and Charleston, South Carolina, for the last seven Years; That Charleston is now his Home when not at Sea; that he has lived in the United States of America since the Year 1789; that he now considers himself a Citizen of the United States; was admitted a Citizen thereof, at a District Court held at New York in the Year 1803-4; that he has resided in New York and Charleston ever since he became a Citizen of the said States, except when he has been absent from Charleston on Voyages, sometimes as Master, and at other Times as Part Owner of Cargoes to the West India Islands, that is to say, to the English and Neutral Port, and once to the Havannah, and on the present Voyage to Senegal.

6. Deponent owns two Slaves, one a Boy named Abil, and another a Girl named Pindar; that these are on Freight, that the Chief Mate he heard from himself, owned a little Girl Slave as Privilege, he gave 75 or 80 Dollars for her at Senegal; that Manuel one of the Portuguese, he also understood, owned two Slaves, both Boys, one named Sambo, and the other Frank, heard him say that he gave 120 Dollars for Sambo, and 60 for the other; heard the said Manuel say, that he carried out Money with him from Charleston; Deponent also heard one other of the Crew, Bill, say, that he owned a Man Slave between himself and another Sailor.

7. That he believes the present Voyage commenced at Charleston in the Month of June last, laden with a Cargo of Lumber and Provisions bound to Senegal, cleared out for Africa; that she arrived at Senegal some Time in the Beginning of August following; that the Master there disposed of the Cargo; and with the Proceeds, and 6000 Dollars in Cash, he heard him say he carried out, purchased 60 odd Slaves on Account of the Owners of the said Vessel, although he only entered and paid the Duties at Senegal on 4000 Dollars; that there were 10 Slaves, besides the Cargo, on Board on Freight, and besides those belonging to himself and the Crew above-mentioned; that those ten were shipped by one Louis Coste, a White Person resident at Senegal, consigned to Phillips and Gardner at Charleston, on his Account for Sale, as he knows no other Person to consign them to; that the said Vessel took her Departure from the River of Senegal on the 29th Day of September last, bound back to the Port of Charleston where the Voyage commenced, and was to have ended; that four or five Days after the Voyage commenced, as the Slaves were all together messing one Day, the Males and Females apart, the Males who were forward, one of them seized the Master as he was pouring Molasses into his Victuals, that most of the other Males then rose, some of whom seized him; that the Master and Crew then drove them below with small Arms, one of the ten on Freight jumped overboard, and a few of the said Slaves got slightly wounded; that an old Woman died at Sea from Sickness, and two Slaves in the River Senegal, before they left it; that they also lost one of the Crew of the said Vessel at Sea, who had been in ill Health; that he frequently on the Passage heard the Master and Crew say, they were apprehensive the Slaves would break out; that a few Days after the said Slaves rose in the Manner abovementioned, the two Mates and two of the Seamen fell sick of Fevers on different Days; that he then heard the Master say, in consequence of his Crew becoming sick, and being apprehensive of the Slaves rising, that he should bear away for the West Indies for the first Neutral Port, whether St. Thomas or St. Bartholomews, which ever he could most conveniently make; that a few Nights before they discovered Land, he heard the Report of a Pistol, and found it was one of the Crew on Watch, who had fired the Pistol; that he did so, he told the Deponent, imagining that the Slaves were about to rise; that the next Morning one of the Male Slaves was taken from below dead, and thrown overboard, who had been shot by the Pistol which had been fired off; that the same Man stabbed another of the Slaves the following Night, supposing that they were again going to break out; that on Saturday last the 31st Day of October, about Twelve of the Clock at Noon they discovered Anegada, and the high Land of Spanish Town, when they steered away for Saint Thomas, which Port they were bound to when taken, for the Purpose of procuring able Hands to navigate the Vessel to Charleston, her destined Port; that he has understood from the Master that the Schooner has made one other Voyage, besides the present, to Senegal; that she went out from Rhode Island to that Place, laden with Provisions and Dry Goods, and at Senegal took on board about sixty or seventy Slaves, which he carried to Charleston, where they were sold by Phillips and Gardner, on Account of Davis, of Rhode Island; that the said Master also informed Deponent, that Davis then interested Phillips and Gardner in the present Voyage, in both Vessel and Cargo, and, as he understood, in a Moiety with Davis; that much about the Time the present Vessel left Charleston, Davis dispatched a Pilot Boat Schooner from Rhode Island, for Senegal, on a similar Voyage, on Account of himself and the said Phillips and Gardner; that the Pilot Boat Schooner arrived at Senegal before the present Vessel did, and left it with the said Schooner bound also to Charleston, but they parted from one another the same Day they sailed, on Account of the Pilot Boat outsailing the said Schooner; that the said Schooner is under the Direction and Management of Phillips and Gardner, of Charleston, and Davis of Rhode Island, as to her Employment in Trade.

9. That he believes Phillips and Gardner and Davis to be Owners of the said Vessel; he founds his Belief from what he heard the Master say, and the Master also of the Pilot Boat Schooner.

12. Respondents' Case[9]

. . . .

The Appeal having been proceeded in, now comes on for Hearing; and it is humbly hoped, on the Part of the Respondents, that your Lordships will be pleased to pronounce against the Appeal and affirm the Sentence appealed from, with Costs, for the following, among other

REASONS.

1st. Because the Vessel was, at the Time of the Capture, prosecuting a Voyage from the French Colony of Senegal, on the Coast of Africa, with a Cargo of Negro Slaves, ostensibly bound to Charleston, but in Fact to the Havannah, or some other Port in the West Indies, then hostile to Great Britain, contrary to the Belligerent Rights of this Country.

2d. Because the said Trade was and is contrary to the prohibitory Laws of the United States of America, by which Laws the Claimants are precluded from setting up any Right of Property in the said Slaves, and the Vessel was subject to Confiscation. Admitting that the prohibitory Laws of a foreign Country are not directly to be enforced by a Court of Prize, yet the Subjects of a Neutral Power, when trading contrary to such Laws, cannot claim the Benefit of such Relaxations of His Majesty's Belligerent Rights, in respect of their Commerce with the Enemy, as were conceded to Neutral Powers, from a friendly Consideration of their Interests in Branches of Commerce which they desired to retain and protect. Independently therefore of the Fact that both Terms of this Voyage were hostile Ports, and supposing One of them only to have been a hostile Colony, the Vessel and Cargo were liable to Condemnation.

[8] Much of the above information was repeated in the deposition of the second mate, Nathaniel Wheaton, a native of Massachusetts.

[9] The cause was heard in the vice admiralty court of Tortola on Nov. 27, 1807, when the judge condemned the schooner to the captors and the slaves to his Majesty. From the condemnation of the schooner and 65 of the slaves an appeal was entered, on the ground that these were the property of American citizens.

3dly. Because the Natives of Africa, composing this Cargo, were condemned to His Majesty, pursuant to the Act of Parliament made for abolishing the Slave Trade, only for the Purpose of restoring them to their Freedom, to which they have been accordingly restored; and your Lordships, if you reverse the Sentence of Condemnation, must restore them to a State of unlawful Imprisonment and Slavery; and this at the Instance of a Person who cannot even receive them and carry them to any Part of the World without a new Violation of the Laws of his Country; and who, by those Laws, is expressly precluded from all Property therein. It is further submitted, that the said Africans cannot be lawfully either exported from a British Colony, or held in Slavery there.

4th. Because the Transaction was fraudulently conducted, and the Master now admits that Nine out of the Seventy Slaves included in the Sentence of Condemnation, were French Property, although he had concealed that Fact both in the Papers and in his Deposition in Preparatory. It is submitted, that this Fact not only destroys the Credit of the Master, but renders it quite impossible that any Part of this Cargo should be restored; for, though he pretended, in an Affidavit irregularly introduced, and which is clearly inadmissible in Evidence that he knew how to distinguish those Nine Slaves from the rest, he admitted that they were not distinguished by any Mark, nor could be identified by any other Means than his own discredited Testimony; nor is it now by any Means possible that such Identification can be made. Your Lordships therefore are desired by the Appellant to decree, that out of Seventy human Beings, all at present in a State of Freedom, and Nine of whom are admitted to be lawfully entitled to be free, Sixty-one shall be given up to perpetual Slavery, although, from the Fault and Fraud of the Appellant himself it is impossible to distinguish the Nine free Persons from the rest, and it must therefore almost unavoidably happen, that some or all of them must, in the Execution of that Decree, be the Victims of a wrong Selection.[10]

THE MIDDLE COLONIES

INTRODUCTION

No attempt has been made to carry the documentation of the slave trade of the Middle Colonies to such detail as that of New England. Their importation of negroes was slight in comparison with that of the colonies to the south of them, and their carrying trade but a small part of their general commerce, by no means comparable to that of the northern colonies. Two subjects not elsewhere presented are illustrated by the documents pertaining to New York—the trade of the Dutch to the Continental colonies and the Madagascar slave trade. In other respects the history of the slave trade of these colonies is much the same as that to the north, on a greatly reduced scale.

The first negroes to gain a place in the records of the colony of New Netherland were not brought from Africa but were probably taken from Spanish or Portuguese prizes. Such names as Paul d'Angola, Simon Congo, Antony Portuguese, John Francisco testify to Portuguese origin. These negroes were brought into New Amsterdam about 1625 or 1626, four or five years after the establishment of the Dutch West India Company.[1]

The various freedoms and exemptions projected by that company contained promises to supply the colony with slaves, but the promises were not observed in a manner that satisfied the patroons. The instructions to the Director General and Council of New Netherland for July 26, 1646, provided that, "for the promotion of agriculture there, it is deemed proper to permit, at the request of the patroons, colonists, and other farmers, the conveyance thither of as many negroes as they are willing to purchase at a fair price; and the Director and Council shall notify the Assembly hereof, every year, when further order shall be taken regarding the transport of negroes thither".[2]

In 1644 Director General Kieft gave liberty to those slaves that had served the company for eighteen or nineteen years. The company must therefore have obtained slaves for its own use as early as 1626, even if it was not yet selling slaves to the colonists. In 1628 the Rev. Jonas Michaelius, complaining of the servants in the new colony, remarked that the Angola slaves were "thievish, lazy, and useless trash". J. F. Jameson, ed., Narratives of New Netherland, p. 129.

Sporadic attempts to carry out such plans as these the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Company certainly made, as the papers hereafter printed demonstrate, but without great success. Trade direct from Africa by the Company itself or by others licensed by the company was occasionally tried but was not the usual method of supply. The most thriving slave trade at this time was probably that of Brazil, and in 1644 it was suggested that the colonists be allowed to send their food stuffs to Brazil and carry away negroes (doc. no. 316). Permission to do this was granted in 1648, but already the revolt of the Portuguese against Dutch rule in Brazil had begun and the Dutch were before long driven from that colony. In the same year (1648) the Amsterdam chamber notified Stuyvesant that under certain restrictions the colony might trade to Angola, but little use seems to have been made of this permission (no. 317).

The directors also fostered or attempted to foster a slave trade from Curaçao to New Netherland. By 1661 they conceived that New Netherland might be used as a base from which to carry on a slave trade with the English in neighboring colonies, but they had little time in which to execute this design.

As one incident in what was in large part a struggle between Dutch and English for the control of the slave trade, the colony changed owners in 1664, and though her new owners were left, at the close of the Anglo-Dutch War, firmly established on the Guinea coast the English trading company was greatly weakened. The new and stronger company of 1672 was too engrossed in supplying the wants of the more inviting West India markets to provide many laborers for the northern colony. Meanwhile, toward the end of the century, New York found an alternative method of supplying her own needs by a trade in negroes, as well as in other commodities, with the pirates who infested the East India route and had their headquarters at Madagascar. How many of these Madagascar negroes were brought into the colony can never be known with certainty, since importers were scarcely in a position to make legal entry. Of the direct trade of the colony with Guinea Lord Cornbury wrote to the Board of Trade in 1708: "sometimes we have a vessell or two, that goe to the Coast of Guinea, and bring negros from thence but they seldom come into this place, but rather goe to Virginia, or Maryland, where they find a much better market for their negros than they can doe here." [3] The extensive report of the Board of Trade in 1709 gives little clue to the New York demand for negroes, since it is combined with that of Carolina.

[3] Cal. St. P. Col., 1708-1709, p. 9.

Legislation though frequent probably affected this demand but slightly. New York, in common with most of the colonies, discriminated in favor of negroes brought directly from Africa. In 1709 a duty of £3 was laid on negroes from any other place. In 1716 an act placing a duty on all vessels trading into the colony refers to a duty on imported slaves. On July 7, 1718, Governor Hunter wrote to the Lords of Trade: "I never heard of any Negroes imported directly from Africa in Vessells belonging to Great Britain, and the duties laid on Negroes from the other Colonies are intended to encourage their own shipping and discourage the importing their refuse and sickly Negroes here from other Colonies which they commonly do." [4] A duty of £2 on negroes brought directly from Africa and £4 on all others was imposed in 1728. This brought forth protest from the Board of Trade but was allowed to stand, and was continued in 1734. In 1753 a duty of 5 and 10 ounces plate was continued or re-enacted and was apparently maintained up to the period of the Revolution. Importation was unequivocally forbidden in 1788.[5] This prohibition was modified in 1801 by allowing bona fide owners of slaves, coming into the state with intent to settle, to bring their negroes with them. Neither act forbade to citizens of the state participation in the slave trade to other places. At the end of the century New York merchants were sharing in that trade to a considerable extent and it is possible that the most important period in the history of the New York carrying trade lies outside the limits of this work.

The presence of negroes in New Jersey in the seventeenth century is made certain by legislation concerning them as early as 1683.[6] There is also a record of a dispute between the collector of the port and a master just returned from Madagascar with negroes. The

In 1709 Governor Hunter was instructed to protect the interests of the African Company in the colony and to report the amount of importation of negroes (ibid., p. 136). [5] Du Bois, Suppression of the Slave Trade, pp. 205, 210, 213, 214, 217. A somewhat cursory examination of the newspapers displays a growing sentiment against the trade and slavery itself during the years following the Revolution. The New York Packet printed the Pennsylvania act for the abolition of slavery, the constitution of the Society for the Promotion of the Manumission of Slaves, and an occasional letter in favor of the abolition of the trade (Jan. 24, Feb. 21, Mar. 31, 1785). The act here referred to however did not forbid slavery in New York nor the carrying of slaves by the citizens of the state. Slaves were still being advertised for sale in the papers of 1792. An account of the slave trade into New York is to be found in A. J. Northrup's Slavery in New York (New York State Library Bulletin, History No. 4), pp. 246 ff.

master, fearful that if he took his cargo into New York it would be seized, entered the negroes in Perth Amboy and sold them in New Jersey.[7] The amount of negro importation in the next twenty-five years was not sufficient to make record keeping necessary. In 1709 Governor Lord Lovelace wrote to the Commissioners for Trade: "Your Lordships' directions relating to the accounts of the numbers of the negroes imported from Africa for severall years past I am afraid cannot be complyed with."[8]

The first duty was laid in 1713, after some friction between assembly and council over its terms.[9] That it was not prohibitive is shown by the report of importations from 1718 to 1726 (no. 370). Attempts to lay a duty in 1739 and in 1744 were blocked by the council, but the assembly met with success in 1762.[10] In 1769 a prohibitive duty of £15 was imposed, and final prohibition was accomplished in 1786 by emancipation of negroes within the state and by a duty of £50 on all importation of negroes who had been brought from Africa since 1776. On March 14, 1798, it was provided that any vessel fitted out for the slave trade within New Jersey was forfeited and any further part taken by citizens of New Jersey in the slave trade thus became unlawful.[11] If New Jersey citizens entered into the illicit trade to any extent they probably did so from the port of New York.

The number of slaves in the colony was never large. In 1738 there were 3981 slaves in a population of 47,369, in 1745, 4606 in a total of 61,403, and in 1770, 11,423 in 169,954.[12]

Though negroes were to be found in the territory which later became Pennsylvania as early as 1638 and continued to be imported until 1768 or 1769, the number was always small. The fact that in spite of a more favorable climate this colony had a smaller black population than either New Jersey or New York may be a result of the strong Quaker influence which prevailed there throughout a large part of the eighteenth century. Much of the history of slavery in Pennsylvania has been written in terms of the abolition movement sponsored by the Quakers, and the fact that Philadelphia merchants were engaged in bringing negroes into the province and in carrying them to other markets is frequently overlooked.[13] Two periods of active importation can be discerned, one about 1730, just after the reduction of the duty from £5 to £2, the other at the close of the 'fifties, brought to an end by the duty act of 1761, which increased the impost to £10.

The first duty was 20 s., imposed in 1700, possibly because by that time merchants were bringing from the West Indies, by ones and twos, a sufficient number of negroes to yield a slight revenue. This duty was doubled in acts of 1705 and 1710 without comment from England, but in 1712, actuated by fear of insurrection similar to that which New York had experienced, the assembly raised the duty to £20, a sum which was of course intended to be prohibitive. This act the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations annulled, and the assembly reverted to £5, a restrictive though not a prohibitive amount. The law of 1715 laying a £5 duty was disallowed in England in 1719; but a new act had already been passed by the colonial legislature in 1718. In 1726 the colony ventured to increase the duty to £10.[14] A petition presented to the general assembly in 1722 on behalf of day laborers who were injured by the use of negro labor may have had some influence in the sentiment for a duty.

The act of 1726 may actually have lessened the supply of incoming negroes, or the employers of labor may have feared that it might do so. For one reason or the other, not long after its passage the iron-masters of Pennsylvania petitioned for abolition of all duty because of scarcity of labor.[15] While the legislature did not go as far as that, the duty was reduced to £2. For a short time the supply seems to have responded to this, but the stimulus to importation did not long continue to bring in negroes and by 1750 few were being sold. The end of the decade however witnessed a revival in the trade so marked as to alarm the assembly, which laid a duty intended to be prohibitive.[16] This was continued until 1773, when it was increased by £10. Slavery was abolished in Pennsylvania by an act of 1780, and participation in the slave trade was prohibited on February 3, 1789. Philadelphia's share in the trade to other markets can be surmised only by the occasional references to Pennsylvania vessels on the West Coast, in the West Indies, or spoken by some passing ship which reports its encounters at the nearest port.[17]

[17] A Philadelphia correspondent to the New Haven Gazette and Connecticut Magazine (June 7, 1787) wrote: "It is high time that the Legislature of Philadelphia should interpose their authority, and put an end, at least in Pennsylvania, to this horrid business altogether."

Were this a history of the abolition movement, Pennsylvania would furnish a large body of material. From the protest against the trade by the Germantown Friends in 1688 to its outlawing by legislation in 1807 the influence of such men as Anthony Benezet, John Woolman, Benjamin Lay, and Ralph Sandiman can scarcely be overestimated. Their story is not to be told here, but their work must be remembered if one is to understand why the slave trade was so small a part of Philadelphia commerce.

Monday, 20 January, 1648.

Again the seventh section of the Management is taken into consideration, and it is resolved that private inhabitants of New Netherland shall be allowed to export their country produce under suitable duty, in their own or chartered ships, to Brazil and Angola, on these following conditions: first, that the aforesaid ships, when in Brazil, shall not be at liberty to return back with sugars to New Netherland aforesaid, but shall let themselves be chartered directly hither. Secondly, that the permit to proceed to Angola above mentioned, shall only be provisionally granted, and that for the time that the dispensation shall continue in regard to the exportation of slaves, which was accorded on Thursday last. Thirdly, that those willing to go to Angola, shall, previous to their departure from New Netherland, take out commission and permit from here, and also give security, similar to all other persons trading from this country. Mr. Mortamer alone requested, that before the passing of this resolution, he may communicate its contents to his Chamber, and learn their opinion thereon.[2] body of the West India Company, made up from all the chambers. Instructions to the director issued in 1646 advised admitting as many negroes as were requested and would be paid for by the colonists (ibid., p. 162). A sentence in a letter from the directors at Amsterdam to Director Stuyvesant implies some importation from Brazil in or before 1646: "Having observed that more negroes could be profitably traded off there than were carried thither in the ship Tamandare, we shall pay attention that for the future more negroes shall be conveyed thither" (O'Callaghan, Voyages of the Slavers "St. John" and "Arms of Amsterdam," p. 99). The supposition that these slaves came from Brazil is based upon the very slight evidence afforded by the name Tamandare, which is that of a bay on the coast of Brazil. They were the slaves whose sale was later complained of by the people of New Netherland: "Even the negroes which were obtained with Tamanderé were sold for pork and peas: something wonderful was to be performed with this but they just dripped through the fingers." N. Y. Col. Docs., I. 302.

The advice of the chamber of accounts of the West India Company, drawn up Apr. 19, 1647, delivered to the company on May 27, 1647, and incorporated in the "Report on the Affairs of the West India Company" of January, 1648, suggested that direct trade between New Netherland and Brazil would cause the former, "by slave labor [to] be more extensively cultivated than it has hitherto been, because the agricultural laborers, who are conveyed thither at great expence to the colonists, sooner or later apply themselves to trade, and neglect agriculture altogether. Slaves, on the other hand, being brought and maintained there at a cheap rate, various other descriptions of produce would be raised, and by their abundance be reduced in price, so as to allow, when occasion would offer, of their advantageous exportation hither and to other parts of Europe."

New Netherland until its inhabitants were encouraged to send their commodities to Brazil and receive slaves in return (N. Y. Col. Docs., I. 216). This interesting attempt to foster a commerce between North and South America was brought to an end when the Dutch were driven from Brazil by the successful Portuguese revolt which was already under way when these plans were formulated.

It must be noted that the inhabitants of New Netherland, while urged to trade to Angola, were specifically excluded from the Guinea coast. N. Y. Col. Docs., I. 364.

have agreed and contracted that a permit and commission in due form shall be granted to the aforesaid skipper, to buy slaves, and further to prosecute such advantage as said owners shall deem expedient on the coast of Africa; in like manner to return here to the Manhattans with the said slaves and their further cargo, provided nevertheless that they shall not be at liberty, in regard to the coast of Africa, to resort on the granted permit to the Gold Coast, and therefore not to go westerly further than Ardre or at most to Popo, on pain of the loss of the ship and goods laden therein, to which end the Directors and Council shall be at liberty to place a supercargo on board said ship, (whom the skipper shall be bound to entertain in the cabin,) and if necessary to cause the people therein to be sworn; for which aforesaid permit and commission the aforesaid owners promise, on the return of the said ship and before her discharge, promptly to pay to the Director and Council aforesaid, or their deputies, a duty of fifteen guilders [2] for each negro, without making any exception or objection thereto, Under bond of their persons and goods, none excepted, with renunciation of benefit ordinis divisionis et excussionis, having entire knowledge thereof.

Done NEW AMSTERDAM this

Remonstrance on the preceding proposed Contract

Honorable, Wise, Prudent Lords, Petrus Stuyvesant, Governor General, and the Councillors of New Netherland, Curaçao and Dependencies thereof.

Honorable, The undersigned Burghers and inhabitants of this city New Amsterdam, your Honors' liege subjects, most respectfully represent that they are inclined to a foreign trade, and especially to the coast of Africa, according to the concession of the hon'ble directors granted in the year 1652, as a special privilege to the inhabitants of this place, in order to fetch thence slaves and other wares might be disposed of here and elsewhere, whereby this city and the entire country would increase and prosper in merchandize, commerce, population and more especially in the tobacco trade, to the advantage not only of these inhabitants, but also of the Hon'ble West India Company which would behold, in time, a vast, populous, and rich commercial province spring up in these parts therefrom.

But it has appeared to them that those who would execute with skipper or merchant going to that country a draft of partnership, which is beset and pinched by such precise conditions, would risk their lives and goods, and at best gain nothing, or run the risk of having ship and goods confiscated. For, besides the entire of the Gold Coast being excepted in that concession, it appears that Cape Verde, Siera Leona, the Greyn (Pepper) and Qua Qua Coast are also excluded; for it is not permitted to resort further West, at farthest, than Popo Sonde. Moreover, the Gold Coast, which from Cape Apolonia to Cape des Rodes or Mount Berique is reckoned 60 leagues, can be extended much further, as will be seen, to any place where gold may be found. And as regards slaves; for each head 15 guilders must be paid, and then the payment for them in tobacco or beaver is again taxed when shipped to Fatherland, which imposes too heavy a burthen on this hazardous trade.

The Hon'ble Company, in the meanwhile, must perceive that our neighbors, the French, English, Swedes, Danes, and Courlanders,[3] are by means of the Netherlanders who repair to them trading along the entire coast, even under their strongholds, without any profit being derived therefrom by the Company; Yea, they suffer rather very serious loss thereby, as is manifest from the example of Arent de Groot, who in the year 1638 built a fort at Cormantyn for the English, and of Hendrick Caerloff, the former fiscal, who built another at Cape Corse in the year 1650 for the Swedes.

Your Honors' subjects, passing by these strongholds, take another course and as faithful subjects address themselves to you, humbly praying permission to trade free and unobstructed in ship or ships, along the whole of the west coast of Africa, that is, from Cape Verd to Cape Lopes de Gonsalve, in all bays, rivers and coasts, without any exception, the Hon'ble Company's strongholds alone excepted, according to the rules and orders, on payment, either here or in Holland, of such moderate duty as shall be agreed on. This doing, etc.[4]

On June 6, 1653, the directors of the Amsterdam chamber wrote to Stuyvesant: "We have by contract given and granted to some private Merchants permission empowering them to repair to the Coast of Africa to trade for Slaves there, and to carry and convey them to the West Indies and the Islands situate thereabouts, and as we expect that the aforesaid Ships or some of them will go to New

322. ORDINANCE IMPOSING A DUTY ON EXPORTED SLAVES, 1655.[1]

Friday, 6 August, [1655].

Whereas the Director General and Council of New Netherland find that the negroes lately arrived here from the Bight of Guinea in the Ship Witte Paert, have been transported and carried hence without the Hon'ble Company or the inhabitants of this province having derived any revenue or benefit therefrom, the Director General and Council have resolved [and concluded that there shall be paid][2] at the general treasury [10 per cent of the] value or purchase [money of the negroes who shall be carried away] or exported [from here elsewhere beyond the jurisdiction of New Netherland. Dated as above.]

Netherland to sell their Slaves also to the Inhabitants there, in such case we desire and request that Your Honor will not demand any Duties from them, but lend them all reasonable Assistance, in order to the removal of every obstacle which might prove a hinderance to Agriculture. This for your information and notification." Ibid., pp. 103-104; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV. 209-210.

[2] The resolution of the Amsterdam chamber which granted permission for this voyage is to be found in N. Y. Col. MSS., 12: 7. M. J. Kohler cites a letter from the director of the Amsterdam chamber to Stuyvesant, written July 24, 1653, which illustrates the determination of the directors to foster the agriculture of New Netherland by providing the colony with a supply of negroes:

"As some of the Jewish nation who are associated with Juan Delino, colonist on said island (Curaçoa), did solicit our consent to purchase a few negroes if any were offered for sale in New Netherland and export them to Curaçoa, to promote as they pretend, their agriculture, we must inform your Honor that we have declined to grant their request, because the company did prefer to encourage first the population and agriculture of New Netherland, whereof all servants ought to be kept there, and no one permitted to leave the country if it ever shall arrive to any degree of grandeur, all of which we have sent for your instruction." 323. Deposition of Joan Gaillardo Ferrara, 1656.[1]

. . . That he, the affirmant, being, in the month of April, of the year 1652, on a voyage from Jamayca to St. Jago de Kuba, in the ship named St Anthoni, whereof Silvester Peres was skipper, and being come to the latitude of Cape Morante, was met by a certain privateer ship whereof Martin Janss Raeff was captain, which ship was navigated, in consequence of the captain's absence, by his Lt.-General, Coert Tysen Campen, which privateer attacked, fought, boarded and conquered his, the affirmant's, ship and made a prize thereof, and proceeded to New Netherland, in the harbor called Manades, and whereas he, the deponent, had a deep interest in said ship carrying, among other merchandise, four-and-forty negroes and negresses, he, the affirmant, in further proof of his property therein, declares that said black men and women are branded in manner as follows:

To wit: First. Thirty-two of them are marked AR being the name of Anthonio de Rivera, and three more are marked J, being the name of Jean Loper[z] which marks are branded on the left breast; and then nine more are marked A. being the name of Allonso, which marks are branded on the right breast. Thus done, in good faith, in Amsterdam, present Henrick Vericselen, Dirck Tack, as witnesses hereunto invited. J. Thielmans, Notary Public.

[323] [1] N. Y. Col. Docs., II. 27. The unavailing struggles of Joan Gaillardo Ferrara to obtain negroes or compensation for negroes seized by pirates can be traced through the first and second volumes of the New York Colonial Documents. Two documents dealing with the case are here printed. The Spanish minister presented Ferrara's cause to the States General, which sent an order to the Director General and Council of New Netherland for the restitution of Ferrara's property and the arrest of the pirates. After the passage of a year, during which the deponent had made a futile voyage to New Netherland, the Spanish ambassador again took up the matter and once more directions were sent to New Netherland for investigation and action. The response was that the pirates charged with the theft of the negroes had never been in New Netherland; that, four years before, Coert Tysen had sold negroes there but that as he had a commission from the French government of St. Christopher he could not be excluded from the colony; and that the negroes under discussion, having changed hands several times, could not with justice be taken from their present owners without compensation. With this Gaillardo was obliged to be content. Ibid., I. 580-581, II. 1-4, 23-43.

325. Charter of the Ship Eyckenboom, 1659.[1]

In the Name of the Lord, Amen. In the year of the birth of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, 1659, the 25th of January, before me Henrick Schaeff, admitted by the Court of Holland a notary public residing in Amsterdam, and the undersigned witnesses, in their own persons came and appeared Messieurs Edward Man and Abraham Wilmerdoncx, directors of the Incorporated West India Company at the chamber here in Amsterdam hereunto authorized by the board of their associates, as charterers on the one part, and skipper Jan Jansen Eyckenboom of Hoorn, master under God, of his ship named the Eyckenboom, long I^c^ XX, wide XXV and one half, hold XI and one half, over it five and one half and six feet, with a half deck and forecastle on either side, and the aforesaid parties declared and do hereby declare to have made and concluded together a certain Contract for a charter of said ship, in the form and manner hereinafter described,

To wit: That the aforesaid skipper shall be bound immediately to deliver his aforesaid ship here in the city fitted out, tight, well caulked, and provided with good and sufficient anchors, cordage, tackle, sails, running and standing rigging and all other necessaries and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and the same to mount with ten good pieces of cannon, with the requisite powder and shot and other ammunition in proportion, but the necessary consumption of powder and shot aforesaid shall be made good by the company, which shall also put on board said ship in addition to the ten pieces aforesaid as many other guns as they please and can conveniently place, and shall provide and pay the expence of the powder and shot therefor, on condition that in the necessary consumption thereof, the aforesaid skipper shall bear the contingent of his ship aforesaid; that further, said company shall man said ship with such and so many hands and provide them with such stores as said company will please and think proper. Which being done on the one side and the other, the aforesaid ship shall on the part of said company, be laden with a full and suitable cargo, or to such extent as said company shall think proper; being laden with all such goods, wares, and merchandizes as they will determine, the aforesaid ship shall, with the first fair wind and weather that God will grant, be dispatched and sail from this country direct to the coast of Africa and run along said coast from above downward, or from Cape Verd down, and touch, trade, lie and remain at all trading posts and ports, according to the pleasure of said company and their commissary, unto the Castle St. George d'el Mina, where they shall receive or find orders from the company's director general and council or shall be furnished with them on sailing hence; And sail towards the Bight of Guinea and touch and trade at all other places lying therein according to the order which shall be given him by the director general or here; from thence proceed further to the islands of Curaçao, Bonaire, and Aruba in the West Indies, and also to New Netherland, and all round every where else the company, or its ministers, shall determine and order, and likewise at all said quarters and places trade and traffic goods, wares and merchandizes and also take in people, load and unload at the pleasure of the aforesaid company or its ministers; And to that end sail to and from, run hither and thither, anchor, lie, load and unload at said coasts, quarters and places as often and as frequently and so long as the service of the company such shall demand; Furthermore, return and come thence to this city Amsterdam or the destined port of discharge, and on her safe return and arrival, there discharge and deliver to the aforesaid company her laden return cargo and goods. Which done, there shall be paid to him the skipper for the contracted freight, every month, the sum of eight hundred guilders of xx stivers each, on condition that the company is bound for the term of six successive months or longer, to be calculated according to the length of time, all current months according to the almanac, to run and commence when the ship shall, in the prosecution of the voyage, reach the sea outside the last bouy of the Texel, and to expire when she shall arrive and cast anchor before this city of Amsterdam or her destined port of discharge, payable xiii days at three weeks after the aforesaid discharge here, besides average and pilotage according to the custom of the sea, and over and above also hat money for the abovenamed skipper at the company's discretion. And said skipper, with and besides the company's crew, shall also make the voyage with the aforesaid ship in order to look to said ship, her appurtenances, etc., making use of the company's stores, but the monthly pay or wages not being at its charge; And he shall be, over and above, subject to the orders and instructions, articles and other rules of the company during the voyage, no more nor less than if he had been sworn to observe the same, they being taken as inserted herein, and especially also in regard to particular or private forbidden trading, in shipping or conveyance of particular or private goods, merchandizes or wares, on pain according to the aforesaid articles, orders and instructions of the said company. The abovementioned directors, parties hereunto, pledging for the payment of the aforesaid contracted monthly or freight moneys, average and pilotage, their private persons and property, and the aforesaid skipper, specially also his person, ship, appurtenances and contracted freight moneys, and generally all his other property, real and personal, present and to come without any exception, submitting the same to the court of Holland and all laws and judges, all aboveboard. Done at Amsterdam in the presence of Cryn van Seventer and Marten Hegervelt, free citizens [poorters] here, witnesses hereunto invited.

326. Bill of Lading of the Spera Mundi, 1659.[1]

I, Jan Pietersen of Dockum, skipper under God of my ship named the Spera Mundi, now lying ready before Curaçao with the first fair wind which God shall vouchsafe, to sail to New Netherland, where my correct unloading shall take place, acknowledge that I have received under the deck of my aforesaid ship, from you Frans Bruyn, to wit, five negroes, whereof one is a negress, all dry and well conditioned, and marked with the annexed mark. All which I promise to deliver (if God grant me a safe voyage) with my aforesaid ship at N. Netherland aforesaid, to the Hon'ble Director General Petrus Stuyvesant, or his factor or deputies on payment for the freight of the above described goods, at the discretion of the said director general, and for the performance hereof, I bind myself, and all my goods and my aforesaid ship and appurtenances. In witness of the truth, I have signed three Copies hereof with my name, all of the same tenor, the one being satisfied, the others to be void.

Written at Curaçao the 24th day of August, Anno 1659.

327. Director Stuyvesant to the Directors at Amsterdam, 1659.[1]

December 26, 1659.

. . . The Negroes purchased at Curaçao for fl. 140 to 150[2] and paid for, cannot be sold here [at New Amsterdam] again at that price, either in Beaver or Tobacco, so that all the expenses and risk of going and returning are entirely lost.

328. Director Stuyvesant to Vice-Director Beck, 1660.[1]

Amsterdam in New Netherland, 17 February, 1660.

. . . Four Negro Boys and one Negro Girl have, as you advised, been sent to, and received by me per the Ship Sphera Mundi;[2] 3 on mine and 2 on Commissary Van Brugge's account, their price being left to our discretion. Upon this subject I must say, that the assignment sent to me by Frans Bruyn is unsigned. However, in order to avoid any difficulty, I left this time the choice to the commissary who took the negro girl and one of the stoutest boys. But greater difficulties have arisen in this wise: one of the five died on the passage hither; some were sick or have become so after arriving. To prevent any misunderstanding in future, the sold negroes ought to be consigned to the purchaser by their names or marks.

[328] [1] Voyage of the "St. John," etc., pp. 163-167. Beck was the director located at Curaçao.

[2] These negroes had been taken from a cargo of 331 slaves which arrived in Curaçao in August.

As regards the price which was left to our discretion, in order to prevent any suspicion of self interestedness, I wish your Honor to inform me after the others have been sold, what price they brought.

I have observed by your dispatch to the hon'ble directors, dated 3 September, forwarded by the ship Sphera Mundi the 26 December last, that the negroes were sold to Mr. Corn's van Ool at 140 pieces of eight, viz., from 40 to 16 years; from 16 to 12 years, three for two; under 12 years, two for one.[3]

We hope and trust that by complying with such price and terms, we shall avoid all suspicion of self interest. I am willing to take my share of the expence and risk of their passage hither, because I desired the negroes for my own service and the promotion of agriculture, not in the expectation of any gain, and therefore sent for young ones, in which regard the worthy inhabitants, christians, and those of the hon'ble company, ought, I think, to be preferred before Spaniards and unbelieving Jews.

You will see by the enclosed extracts from my letter covering yours to the hon'ble directors, what I have proposed to them. It is therefore desirable and somewhat necessary that a fixed price should be set on horses conveyed hither, or ordered from Curaçao by private persons, as well as on negroes as far as practicable, according to their ability and age, because the one as well as the other are most urgently required here for purposes of agriculture and its advancement, and finally would tend to the greater advantage, trade and prosperity of the hon'ble company and its subjects. . . .

In regard to the negroes which the hon'ble directors ordered to be sent hither, they ought to be stout and strong fellows, fit for immediate employment on this fortress and other works; also, if required, in war against the wild barbarians, either to pursue them when retreating, or else to carry some of the soldiers' baggage; it being very apparent that we shall be constrained to wage a righteous and offensive war against them, for the peaceable possession once of the land, and the avenging of numerous suffered affronts and murders. An important service would be conferred on the company, on us and the country if there were among the sold negroes, some of experience who have resided a certain time at Curaçao.

[3] This, though it is not clearly stated, undoubtedly means that the negroes were sold according to Spanish custom—not per head but per pieza de India. Of those from 16 to 12 years of age it took three negroes to make two piezas de India; of those under 12, two to make one.

329. Voyage of the Gideon, 1663.[1]

Charter party of the ship "Gideon" for a voyage from Holland to Africa and New Netherland.

This day, the 15th of November anno 1663, before me, Hendrick Schaef, notary public, admitted by the Court of Holland, residing at Amsterdam, and the undersigned witnesses. In their own persons came and appeared Messieurs Abraham Wilmerdoncx and Jacob Pergens, directors of the chartered West India Company, chamber of this city, authorized thereto by the gentlemen, their fellow members of the board, of the one part, and Skipper Simon Cornelisz Gilde, master (under God) of his ship named Gideon, of the other part, to me, the notary, well known, and declared that they had agreed and contracted with one another that the aforesaid skipper shall do his best to make ready his aforesaid ship Gideon as speedily as possible and barring all accidents, which may God prevent, to deliver the same without fail at the Texel, ready to sail, and to take on board such merchandise of the aforesaid company as he shall be able conveniently to stow in the hold of his ship, in the space which shall be found available after all the necessary stores for his intended voyage have been taken on board, and without receiving any freight therefor to transport the same to the coast of Africa, to Castle El Mina, or to Angola, as the honorable freighters shall be pleased to order, and that the aforesaid skipper shall there take on board, free of freight, thirty lasts,[2] or more, of merchandise, according to the amount of space available in the ship as aforesaid, and therewith to sail direct to Angola, to such places as he shall be ordered to visit by the director general and as the company's agents in Angola shall think proper. Also, that the aforesaid skipper shall there from time to time, as promptly and as quickly as possible, take on board as many slaves as he can conveniently transport; also take with him from there to Curaçao and no farther as much copper and as many elephant tusks as he can conveniently load into his ship, likewise without receiving any freight therefor, unless less than two hundred and seventy-five slaves were taken on board, in which case he shall receive as freight for the copper, elephant tusks and other wares as much as is hereinafter specified. Furthermore, he shall proceed with his slaves first to Cajana,[3] situated on the main wild coast of America, and there deliver to the company's director as many slaves as he shall be ordered to, and then depart with the rest for the island of Curaçao, and there deliver the rest to the vice director. Furthermore, he shall transport without charge from Curaçao such wares on account of the company as the vice director shall think proper and he can conveniently load into his ship, and further proceed with from three hundred to three hundred and fifty negroes to New Netherland and, having delivered the same there to the director general or his agent, be free to go with his ship where he pleases; on condition that, if on the fifteenth of August next ensuing the aforesaid skipper has not yet arrived with his slaves at Curaçao, the directors shall not be bound to send him with slaves to New Netherland, but parties shall be mutually free and released from their obligations at Curaçao. Furthermore, on arrival of the aforesaid skipper at Cajana, Curaçao, and New Netherland, his slaves shall at each place be immediately taken from board and he shall be given therefor three receipts of the same tenor, in which it shall be expressly stated how many negroes from four to eight, how many from eight to fifteen, how many from fifteen to thirty-six and how many above thirty-six years were delivered. And the aforesaid skipper shall at his own charge furnish proper food and drink to the aforesaid negroes as long as he shall have the same on board, and therefore defray the cost of food, water casks and all that shall be needed for the storage of water and victuals for the aforesaid negroes and the partitioning-off of the ship, without the directors, with respect to the food, being bound to do more than at their discretion to give orders that the aforesaid skipper, lying at anchor to take on board slaves, may obtain some refreshments from the land on the directors' account; and with regard to other expenses they shall be held liable only for such as are specified below. Furthermore, the company shall have liberty to send in the aforesaid ship one or more persons in their service to the Gold Coast, Angola, Curaçao and New Netherland, and especially a supercargo, whose wages shall be paid by the company and who must be entertained in the cabin at the expense of the skipper. Furthermore, the aforesaid skipper, fulfilling his part of what is hereinbefore written, shall receive for each day that he shall wait at Castle El Mina or on the wild coast of Cajana the sum of fifty guilders, each time to be reckoned from the day he casts his anchor at the respective places until he shall lift the same again, and further be obliged to wait at Angola, without being able to claim any lay-days,[4] until he shall have obtained his slaves; likewise he shall be obliged to wait at or on Curaçao for the space of three weeks, after the expiration of which three weeks at Curaçao he shall receive his lay-days as before at the rate of fifty guilders a day. Secondly, in case he shall not receive two hundred and seventy-five slaves at Angola as above written, he shall receive as freight for the copper and other wares loaded on board one half stiver per pound.[5] Thirdly, the honorable directors, on presentation of one of the receipts above mentioned, shall pay to the owners or their agent for each negro who shall be delivered alive on the wild coast or at Curaçao the sum of one hundred guilders and for those who shall be transported from Curaçao to New Netherland thirty guilders each, provided that those between the ages of fifteen and thirty-six years shall be counted as one negro each; that of those from fifteen to eight years down, as well as those above the age of thirty-six, three negroes shall be counted as two; and that of those below eight years two shall be counted as one. With this understanding, however, that in case he be furnished at Curaçao with other negroes than those whom he brought there, for whom a much larger reduction must be made, the proportionate loss shall be made good by decision of arbitrators, to be chosen by parties on both sides. Likewise, the skipper shall receive for all persons who shall be sent over in the service of the company, eleven stivers a day for those who (with the exception of the super-cargo) mess in the cabin, and seven stivers for those who mess on deck. Also, the honorable directors have paid to the aforesaid skipper, under guaranty, for the purchase of food and other necessaries for the negroes, the sum of eight thousand guilders, which eight thousand guilders upon his safe arrival shall be deducted from his freight charges. Furthermore, in addition to the aforesaid eight thousand guilders, they are paying a premium of eight per cent. on the aforesaid eight thousand guilders to the owners, upon condition that in case of loss or capture of the ship (which may God prevent) the aforesaid skipper and his sureties shall be held to return the aforesaid eight thousand guilders promptly and without any exception, compensation or rebate, inasmuch as for the aforesaid premium they assume the risk of the said eight thousand guilders. Furthermore, the honorable directors shall furnish the said skipper with some wrist and ankle shackles to restrain therewith the refractory negroes on board, which shackles the skipper shall be held to deliver on his arrival at Curaçao to the aforesaid directors, or here to the aforesaid company in exchange for a proper receipt. It is further stipulated that if, contrary to expectation, it be found that any one has loaded in said ship any merchandise other than that belonging to the company, the company or the aforesaid directors shall have the right to have a proper search made here or over there, as often as they please, and if it be found that the skipper or any one of his crew has carried on any illicit trade on the aforesaid coast of Africa, whether with white people or black, or that any merchandise or cash has been taken along without permission, in whatever manner it may have been done, the same shall be subject to confiscation for the benefit of the aforesaid company. The skipper shall be bound to engage the crew upon these conditions and if the skipper himself, contrary to expectation, should upon sufficient legal evidence be found guilty of having carried on such illicit trade, he shall in addition to the confiscation of the merchandise forfeit, for the benefit as above written, his share in the ship, the freight and the proceeds of the voyage. All of which shall also take place in regard to each owner individually who shall be found guilty thereof for so far as his share is concerned and no further. It is further stipulated that the honorable directors shall within the space of four months from the date hereof not let any ship go from here to Angola, directly or otherwise, to be loaded and despatched from there before or at the same time as the aforesaid skipper; provided however that this shall not oblige the honorable directors to revoke the commissions heretofore issued, or if any ships from the coast of Guinea should have sailed thither before his arrival there to make any change in the orders issued. And it is promised that the skipper upon the satisfactory completion of his voyage shall be presented with a piece of cloth for a cape for himself and a flag for the ship, at the discretion of the honorable directors. For the performance and fulfillment of what is hereinbefore written, the aforesaid directors bind the hereinbefore mentioned sum of money in hand paid and furthermore all the company's property and effects and especially all the aforesaid negroes or the proceeds thereof, and such other goods as may be sent hither by the aforesaid company's agents in the said ship; and the aforesaid skipper binds his said ship, the freight and all the appurtenances thereof, together with his person and all his other goods, none excepted, the respective contracting parties submitting themselves to all courts and judges, and especially to the Court of Holland, without fraud, and mutually consenting that instruments in proper form be made hereof and delivered. Done at Amsterdam in presence of Isaack Ipesen and Willem de Haes, acting as witnesses hereto, also at Amsterdam.

330. The Directors at Amsterdam to the Director and Council of New Netherland, 1664.[1]

Honorable, Prudent, Worthy, Beloved, Faithful, . . . We, likewise, have been not a little astonished at the insufferable and hostile action committed by a certain English privateer in attacking and seizing our ship 't Waepen van Amsterdam, on her way from the coast of Guinea, which he carried, with her cargo of Slaves, into Virginia. And as you have sent Councillor Johan de Decker and Commissary Verlet thither to reclaim them, we are impatient to learn their return, not without apprehension that we shall hear by the first opportunity that they either were too late, or else were put off with frivolous excuses and consequently will have gone back without having accomplished anything.[2]

In our last which we enclose, you were informed that we contracted with Symon Gilde, skipper of the ship Gideon, to export a goodly number of slaves from Loango on the Coast of Africa, and to convey them by way of Curaçao to New Netherland; also that this city is a partner therein for one-fourth part, as may be more fully seen by the copies hereunto annexed.

As these slaves are intended solely to promote agriculture in that country, which is the only means of making that state prosperous, so it is our express order and desire, that the aforesaid slaves shall be sold there only to our inhabitants on the express condition, that they shall not be exported out of our district, but specially retained therein, to be employed in the cultivation of the soil, so that the great expense which we have incurred may not be fruitless, but that we may, in due course of time, reap the fruits which we promise ourselves therefrom. The aforesaid ship with about 300 slaves may, according to our calculation, arrive yonder in the month of June or July next.

As your Honor will be greatly relieved by this supply, you will therefore use every effort that one-third part at least of the proceeds shall be forwarded hither in beaver, in order that we may be enabled to pay the freight, or the greatest part thereof at farthest, on the arrival of the aforesaid ship here, which we are bound to do by contract. Otherwise, we shall lose all ambition to continue such transmission of slaves. This we commend to your Honor's special consideration.

And although we have also ordered you, in the aforesaid despatch, to agree amicably with the city's officers about chartering the company's sloop for the conveyance of the city's slaves to the south river,[3] yet we have subsequently resolved and determined that it should be effected here by the principals on both sides. Wherefore we have concluded to order and recommend you, in case the aforesaid sloop may be employed for that service, distinctly then to write us your advice and opinion what and how much ought to be charged for her freight, adding the reasons in support thereof, in order to enable us to make proper use of them in the present conjuncture.[4]

AMSTERDAM, this 20th January, 1664.

331. DIRECTOR STUYVESANT TO VICE-DIRECTOR BECK, 1664.[1]

AMSTERDAM IN NEW NETHERLAND,
7 May, 1664.

. . . Messrs. the directors, and the Commissioners of the Colonie on the South River, have entered into a contract with Simon Cornelissen Gilde, skipper of the Gideon, to transport hither a lot of negroes for agricultural purposes.[2] These negroes will, we hope, have arrived before this letter reaches your Honor, or, at least, be embarked after its receipt. We shall therefore recommend that, being properly provided, they may be dispatched hither as speedily as possible. If it happen that Simon Gilde should arrive with the negroes at the island of Curaçao three weeks or a month later than the charter party provides, say, the middle of August, the first installment might reach here before or by the middle of September from Curaçao, and the remainder by the middle of October. In that event a fair price might be realized for them.

332. TERMS OF SALE OF NEGROES, 1664.[1]

[Conditions and Terms on which the Director General and] Council of [New Netherland] propose [to sell to the] highest bidder a lot of Negroes and Ne[gresses. 29 May, 1664.]

The buyers shall immediately take possession of their purchased negroes, and may use them as bond slaves, and also sell them to others.

But whereas, the meaning of the directors is, to promote and advance the population and agriculture of this province more and more, the purchased negroes or negresses shall not be sold, carried away or transported beyond this province. Whoso acts contrary hereunto, shall forfeit for each negro or negress, One hundred Guilders, beaver value.

Payment shall be made, one fourth part down, the remainder in September or October next, in good beaver at eight guilders the skin, or in merchandize, beaver price, or in provisions such as the Hon'ble Company may require, to be delivered here at the Manhattans at the following prices:

333. Director Stuyvesant to the Directors at Amsterdam, 1664.[1]

. . . This day fortnight arrived here your Honors' Vessel, the Musch [Sparrow], with forty head of slaves, sent to us by Vice Director Beck to procure provisions and all sorts of timber work, fix ox carts and a new rosmill. . . .

The negroes and negresses have all arrived safely and in health, but were, on an average, quite old, and as the skipper alleges, rejected by the Spaniards. The product of the greater part appears by the accompanying account of the public vendue. They would have brought more, had they not been so old. Five of the negro women, who were, in our opinion, unsalable, have been kept back and remain unsold. In like manner, six negroes also, to help to cut the required timber and to perform some other necessary work for the honorable company.

334. The Directors at Amsterdam to Director Stuyvesant, 1664.[1]

Honorable, Prudent, Valiant, Beloved, Faithful, We have heretofore advised you of our intention to let the ship Gideon go from Curaçao to the Manhattans with her slaves. Having since then, and now for the first time, remarked the hostile and treacherous designs manifested by the English towards the company's rightful conquests on the coast of Africa, where they have already mastered Cape Verd and taken 3 to 4 of the company's ships or yachts, we have come to a different determination. As your Honor also will not be left unmolested by them, for we understand that they have likewise sent 3 ships with men thither to the assistance of their nation, and as the aforesaid ship with slaves might hereby be brought into difficulty, we have thought proper to send her first to the South River, to learn there from the city's director how matters stand at the Manhattans. On learning of the arrival of this ship there, your Honor must immediately commission some one to go thither, to be present at the allotment of the negroes, and to repair to the Manhattans with the share, or ¾th the part that is to fall to the company; with this understanding, however, that if the above-named ship had not brought thither above 200 head, there shall be left to the city at least 60 head, as we find ourselves under obligation to accommodate them with that number.[2] . . .

335. Vice-Director Beck to the Director and Council of New Netherland, 1664.[1]

Curaçao in Fort Amsterdam,
the 21. July, Anno 1664.

Honorable, Valiant, Wise, Prudent and right Discreet Gentlemen.

Gentlemen, My last to your Honors was dated 28 April, by the Company's ship the Musch, which I not only hope has arrived in your parts long before your receipt of this, but ardently desire to see her return here every day.

Since then a handsome Genoese [genuees] ship, named the St. Crous [Sta. Cruz], arrived here on the 12th of June last from Cartagena, with One hundred and sixty thousand pieces of eight in specie, to be all invested in slaves through the factors residing here on behalf of the Genoese Company,[2] who, however up to this time have delayed doing any thing, by advice and order of their principals, in the expectation that they will have concluded a new contract with the company, and that more slaves may arrive here, so as to invest the entire capital which they have brought for that purpose in their aforesaid ship, in slaves and to carry them away at once.

On the 8th instant, arrived here safely by way of Guinea, Angola, and Cayenne, the ship Gideon, Simon Cornelissen Gilde, skipper, the bearer hereof, with over three hundred slaves. I was in hopes by means of these and the supply of slaves already here, to have enough to be able on the advice and order of the company, to accommodate the aforesaid factors for their abovementioned specie, as then was their intent; for they said, in case no seasonable advice or order was received from their principals and the company, that they would then contract with me for as many slaves as were here at present, and might meanwhile happen to arrive, to be paid for on delivery, in order to dispatch their aforesaid ship, which was lying here at great expense. So they were expecting that they could have availed themselves on this occasion, for their vessel, of the slaves brought hither by the aforesaid Ship Gideon, when the abovementioned Skipper Simon Cornelissen Gilde brought me such ample order and instructions to the contrary, that I could not dare to change them, as your Honors will please to observe by the annexed copies. Pursuant to said orders I am sending to your Honors herewith, by the aforesaid ship and skipper the number of slaves to be seen in the accompanying invoice and bill of lading to which, for brevity's sake, I refer.

[335] [1] N. Y. Col. MSS., 17: 85.

[2] That is, Domingo Grillo and Ambrosio Lomelin, who held the contract for supplying the Spanish market with negroes. See this work, I. 105-106.

here, the aforesaid factors will have to content themselves with the slaves which have been previously brought hither on the company's account; and as many of the slaves brought here by the said ship Gideon are affected with scurvy, I have therefore retained the greater number of these here and embarked others in their place from among those brought in previous ships. When those are cured of the scurvy, they can be delivered, in the place of the others, to the aforesaid factors. . . .

336. Bill of Lading of the Gideon, 1664.[1]

I, underwritten Simon Cornelissen Gilde, skipper under God of my ship, named the Gideon, now lying in the Harbor of Curaçao, ready to sail with the first fair wind (which God shall vouchsafe) for the Manhatans in New Netherland acknowledge to have received between the decks of my aforesaid ship, the number of three hundred slaves, consisting of one hundred and sixty men and one hundred and forty women, all merchantable; which slaves I promise to deliver (if God grant me a prosperous voyage), with my aforesaid ship at the said Manhatans to the hon'ble director general Petrus Stuyvesant or his order, on payment of my freight for the aforesaid slaves, as agreed upon and conditioned by the charter party, and for the performance of what is hereinbefore written, I bind myself and all my property and my aforesaid ship with all its appurtenances. In witness of the truth I have signed three bills of lading, all of the same tenor, the one being fulfilled, the others are void.

Written at Curaçao, the 21st July, Anno 1664.

Symon Cornelissen Gilde.

337. Director Stuyvesant to Vice-Director Beck, 1664.[1]

Honorable, Prudent, Wise, and very Discreet Sir, Our last letter to you was by the ship the White Horseman, skipper Hendrick Jansen Stuyvesant, dated the 7th May last. . . .

Since then, viz., on the 24th May, arrived here in safety, God be praised, the Company's ship Sparrow, skipper Jan Petersen Groot of Dockum, by whom I received your Honor's letter of the 28th of April, to which the following will serve as an answer.

The slaves and merchandize arrived safely according to invoice and bill of lading. . . .

I have sold the negroes that have been sent, at public auction to the highest bidder, for provisions, with the exception of six of the men, who are employed in the company's service on the works of the fort, and five negro women who, on account of their advanced age, could not find a purchaser, except at a very low figure. The remainder have been sold at prices mentioned in the annexed copy of the conditions of the sale; being, in our opinion, a tolerably fair price for such a lot. Had they been better, there is not a doubt but they would have produced a much larger amount, as may be inferred from the price of a few who were sold for 600 Guilders and upwards.

[336] [1] N. Y. Col. MSS., 17: 86.
[337] [1] Voyages of the "St. John," etc., pp. 216-221.

These negroes have afforded us great relief in the purchase of provisions for the garrison. Otherwise, we should have been constrained by the low state of the treasury, caused by the continued troubles, first with the barbarians, and now at present with the neighboring English, to purchase supplies by bills of exchange. . . .

In our former dispatch, duplicate whereof we here inclose, we stated among other things, if it should come to pass that Simon Gilde arrived at the island of Curaçao, with negroes three weeks or a month later than intimated in the charter party, say the middle of August, therefore the sending of the negroes hither should not be postponed, etc. Having reconsidered this, we have, for divers reasons, whereof one is, that the Right Honorable the Regents of the city of Amsterdam are interested therein one-fourth part, thought it best and most justifiable, not to make the slightest alteration in the charter party which the directors have concluded with Simon Gilde. Wherefore we request and recommend your Honor to regulate yourself by the said charter party in the forwarding of the abovementioned negroes. But as we find ourselves burthened here by an unusually strong garrison, for the support of which, exclusive of the monthly pay, we require considerable provisions, for the purchase whereof we are not well provided; we, on that account, have need, yea great need of a few slaves, in order to truck them for provisions. Yet, for reasons already given, we deem it unjustifiable to send for the said negroes, contrary to the charter party concluded with Simon Gilde.

Yet requiring a large quantity of provisions both for this place and Curaçao, as we have already stated and more fully explained, should an opportunity offer to purchase any, funds would be absolutely necessary. Wherefore we recommend this seriously to your consideration; and if Simon Gilde arrive in season, to send us as many negroes as circumstances will permit. If negroes be scarce, which however we should prefer to have for the good and advancement of the country, according to the Hon'ble Company's order, some other effects, either money or osnaburghs and other coarse linen, or any thing else that is not needed for the public service, might be spared and bartered for provisions. If negroes, your Honor will please to bear in mind to have them sent off in time that they may probably arrive here before, or about All Saints, and that they be suitably provided against the cold.

338. The Council of New Netherland to the Directors at Amsterdam, 1664.[1]

. . . Meanwhile, God be thanked, the ship St. Jacob arrived here in safety on the 13th instant, from the South River, and, two days after, the ship Gideon, which sailed from Curaçao on the 21st of July with 300 slaves, 160 men and 140 women, whereof 9 died on the passage. This is a very poor lot; indeed the women so poor that we fear the most of them will remain on our hands, or must be let go at a very low figure, whereof more in our next. . . .

Pursuant to the contract which your Honors made with the directors of the city's colony, we have delivered by lot the fourth part of the abovementioned negro men and women, into the hands of Mr. Pieter Alrichs, commissary of Indian cargoes, and councillor of the colony of New Amstel, who has been here for some time for the purpose of purchasing oxen, cows and horses, to the number of 200 or thereabouts. . . .

The colony has received by lot for its fourth part, 38 men and 34 women. But as there were among these, as well as among those that fell to the company, many above the age of 36 years, three of them must be counted for two. . . .

This serves mainly to advise your Honors of the arrival of the abovementioned negroes who, though a very poor lot, as already stated, yet in our most deplorable state, will wonderfully relieve us, so that we and your Honors' servants and inhabitants, find ourselves greatly obliged, and gratefully acknowledge your care in the sending of the said negroes. . . .

339. COLONEL RICHARD NICOLLS TO CORNELIUS VAN RUYVEN, 1664.[1]

An Order to Mr. Cornelius van Ruyven, concerning the Negroes, etc., of the West India Company.

Whereas there was a certaine Number of Negroes both men and women brought from Curazo hither, the greatest part of which were sold to divers persons before the Surrender of this place, into my hands under his Ma'ties obedience, upon severall Termes and Condicons as by their Bookes doth appeare, And I being not as yet satisfied, that the said Negroes are included in the Articles of Surrender, I do hereby Order and require that all payments in Goods or Beaver, that is, or shall be due, according to the severall Sales, made of the 30th of August and 1st of September, and those also of the 12th of September following, be without fraud or Rebate really paid in unto Mr. Cornelius van Ruyven, who is to keepe what hee shall so receive, in his hands for my use, untill the Accompts shall be better adjusted, and in the meane time, that no discount (as to the [3] Stuyvesant in accounting to the company for his surrender of New Amsterdam on the appearance of the English offered as one reason the scarcity of supplies: "14 to 16 days before the arrival of the frigates, there arrived and came, in the ship Gideon between 3 and 400 half-starved Negroes and Negresses who alone, exclusive of the garrison, required 100 skepels of wheat per week" (N. Y. Col. Docs., II. 430). To this the company replied: "Finally, the aforesaid Stuyvesant says: That the scarcity of provisions was caused, among other things, by the arrival of the ship Gideon with between three and four hundred Negroes. Truly, also, a flimsy excuse. For, besides the number not being so large, one-fourth of them had been delivered to the officer of the city's Colonie on the South river, who took his departure with them for the South river three days after the arrival of the frigates because he saw the shape things were taking in New Netherland and around the government; and the remainder were sold shortly after, so that he had not to provide for them." Ibid., II. 495.

. . . Secondly the deputy govern'r of the R'll Company tells me that that Company only pretend to the first empcion [importation] or transportacion of Negroes out of Guiny, and when they are once sold in Barbadoes, Jamaica etc. by them or their factors, they care not whither they are transported from thence; for the more are carryed of, the more againe wilbe wanting; and therefore you need not suspect the Company will oppose the introduceing of black Slaves into New Yorke from any place (except from Guiny) if they were first sold in that place by the Royall Company or their agents.[2]

Present: The Kings most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Upon reading a Report from the Right Hon'ble the Lords of the Committee for Trade and Plantations in the words following

May it please Your Ma'ty, In obedience to your Majesty's Order in Council of the 4th of December 1685. Wee have examined the petition of Captain Christopher Billop[2] complaining that having consigned from Nevis some Negroes and other Goods to Mr. John Injohns of New York, the said Negros and Goods or the effects of them were attached at New York by Mr. John West Attorney to Mr. John Bawden and others of London[3] where the said West ob-

[2] Capt. Christopher Billop's petition (ibid., pp. 365-366) adds to this account a few further items about his difficulties. He stated that as commander of the Deptford he had, in June, 1682, captured the Providence, a London interloper, under Capt. George Nantor. The Providence with all that belonged to her was shortly after condemned in the admiralty court at Nevis. Some time after the condemnation he sent negroes to John Injons of New York. The point at issue, that is, whether the negroes sent to New York were removed by him from the Providence, he ignored. For an account of his difficulties in the West Indies see this work, I. 276-279; also Cal. St. P. Col., 1681-1685, p. 441; Acts P. C. C., 1680-1720, pp. 38-39, 89.

Whereupon wee most humbly Offer our Opinion that your Majesty bee pleased to admit the pet'rs appeal before Your Ma'ty in Council from the said sentence in such manner as is desired by the pet'r within four months after notice given of your Ma'ty's pleasure the pet'r having first given security here for the summ of Two Thousand Pounds to your Ma'ty to bee levied upon the Petitioner's Estate both Real and Personal, as well in Your Ma'ty's province of New York in America, as in England or elsewhere, to answer such determination in his said appeal as your Majesty in Council shall award. Whereof the said Mayor of New York, or the Mayor thereof for the time being and all others concerned are to take notice, and give obedience hereunto. 343. The Board of Trade to the Earl of Bellomont, 1698.[1]

. . . We send you also here inclosed the deposition of Humphrey Perkings of New Yorke, which we caused to be taken for the same reason.[2] It relates to a voyage from New York to Curasso some years ago in a ketch whereof one Smart was master and Colonel Depeyster owner; that you may make what use you can of it, either

[2] The instructions to Governor Dongan, May 29, 1686, contained the usual exhortation to encourage all trade, especially that of the Royal African Company, and then added: "And you are to take care that there bee noe trading from the Province of New York to any place in Africa within the Charter of the Royal African Company. And you are not to suffer any ships to bee sent thither without their leave or Authority" (N. Y. Col. Docs., III. 374, sect. 56). Similar instructions were sent to the New York governors throughout the century.

[3] This was doubtless the same Robert Allison who, as supercargo on the Fortune, in 1697, traded with the pirates of Madagascar. Jameson, Privateering and Piracy, p. 186.

[343] [1] N. Y. Col. Docs., IV. 413. The same account is to be found in a report on the affairs of New York, made by the Board of Trade on Oct. 19, 1698 (ibid., p. 390). Richard Coote, earl of Bellomont, governor 1698-1701.

[2] The Board of Trade was endeavoring to collect any and all material which bore upon the colonial trade with pirates. Closely akin to this was the trade for Madagascar negroes, in which New York had been engaged since 1686, when the Mariner's Adventure was permitted to enter New York and discharge her cargo, after her master gave affidavits that he had not been in the territory of the Royal African Company and offered security for any claims which it might make (Cal. St. P. Col., 1685-1688, pp. 220, 231, 232, 253). A further account of the investigation of this trade and of Bellomont's efforts to bring it to an end is to be found in N. Y. Col. Docs., IV. 304, 319, 325, 388-389.

in troubleing those concerned for what is past, or preventing the like (as much as possible) for the future. But upon occasion of this Perkings it is fit that we acquaint your Lordships a little particularly with his story. He was master of a vessell called the Frederick sloop belonging to Mr. Frederick Philips,[3] and (since your Lordship's being there) was sent out under the conduct of Adolphus Philips to cruise for a vessell expected from Madagascar, which vessell they accordingly met, and having taken great quantitys of East India Goods out of her and put them on board this sloop, Adolphus returned in the Madagascar ship with nothing but Negroes to New York. In the mean while this sloop went and lay privately in Delaware Bay till Adolphus came againe from New Yorke to them, and then sent her away (under the conduct of one Jay a Frenchman) North about Scotland to Hamburgh. But at Hamburgh S'r Paul Ricaut his Majesties Resident getting notice of such a vessell with such a cargo, seized what he found and sent the men hither, who have all of them made depositions about the circumstances of the whole voyage. . . .

344. COLONEL FLETCHER'S ANSWERS TO THE COMPLAINTS AGAINST HIM, 1698.[1]

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of the Council for Trade and Plantations.

May it please your Lordships, . . . Glover[2] was an inhabitant of New York and master of a ship built there, and then riding in the harbour; he had another of the like sort. . . .

As for Glover he went directly, as I heard, with a loading to Barbadoes, and there tooke a new Commission from the Governour, and was thence sent for Negros to Madagascar, and that he was there taken by the Pirates. . . .

I say the same thing in the case of granting a commission to Moston.[3] The case (as I recollect) was thus. There were severall English and Dutch merchants of New Yorke who had hired the ship Fortune, to fetch negroes from Madagascar, as was every year usuall with them.[4] . . .

[3] Frederick Philipse, owner of Philipse Manor, which he received from Governor Fletcher, accumulated much of his fortune from the tempting trade with pirates which had its headquarters in Madagascar (Jameson, Privateering and Piracy, p. 182). For an account of his life see E. H. Hall, Philipse Manor Hall, pp. 45-81.

[344] [1] N. Y. Col. Docs., IV. 446. Benjamin Fletcher was governor of New York from 1692 to 1698, during which period the colonial trade with pirates had its heyday (Jameson, Privateering and Piracy, p. 167 n.).

[2] Fletcher was defending himself from the charge that he had granted privateering commissions to several well-known pirates. For Glover's arrival in the region of piratical activities see Jameson, Privateering, pp. 183-185.

London, December 24th 1698.

345. Representation of the Board of Trade, 1699.[1]

To the Kings Most Excellent Majesty, . . . The 10th Article is: That Colonel Fletcher granted also a like commission to Thomas Moston Commander of the ship Fortune, an unfree bottom, tho' it was then evident that the said ship was not designed for any service of war, but for illegal trade, and the sequel demonstrated it accordingly.

In answer to this article Colonel Fletcher acknowledges that he granted the said Commission to Captain Moston upon the desire of several merchants who had hired the ship to fetch negroes from Madagascar; but denies his knowledge that the said ship was an unfree bottom: the evidence of which, as it lyes before us, consists of the information given us by the Earl of Bellomont that the said ship was known to all men to have been formerly a Dutch privateer; also in the copy of her Charter party of affreightment, by which she is hired to lade other goods as well as Negroes; likewise by the cargo she took in publickly at New Yorke, which the Earl of Bellomont writes was goods proper for the pirates; and in the last place by her seizure and confiscation for illegal trade upon her returne thither. . . .

Whitehall, March the 9th 1698/9.

346. The Earl of Bellomont to the Board of Trade, 1699.[1]

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations.

My Lords. . . . But rather than require more soldiers from England (for I confesse I grudge our parting with people out of England) I should advise the sending for negros to Guinea, which I understand are bought there and brought hither all charges whatever being borne for 10£ a piece New Yorke mony, and I can cloath and feed 'em very comfortably for 9*d.* a piece pr. day sterling money, which is 3*d.* pr. day lesse than I require for the soldiers. If it were practicable for the King to be the merchant and that whole manage-

[4] It is small wonder that Madagascar traffic in negroes attracted ambitious traders. Ten shillings expended in English goods was said to purchase a negro in Madagascar, while on the West Coast the price had long been from £3 to £4 and at the end of the century was rapidly rising. ment of this undertaking were upon his account, which I confess I am not able to judge whether it be (as I said) practicable or would be pleasing to the Nation; but were it so, there would be a profit of at least £50 pr. Cent made of the goods sent over hither and to the other plantations for defraying the charge of making and providing the Stores. . . .

347. THE EARL OF BELLOMONT TO THE BOARD OF TRADE, 1699.[1]

BOSTON, August 24th 1699.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations.

My Lords. . . . I desire to be directed by your Lordships whether I may not lawfully require bonds of all the ships that go from hence and New Yorke on trading voyages, that they shall not goe to Madagascar nor elsewhere, where pirates frequent. I know 'tis a thing sometimes practised to take the Governors passe for one port or place and sail to another. And that trick was served me last summer at New Yorke by Baldridge[2] and Taylor who fitted out a Briganteen, and took my passe for Antegoa, but I was told their designe was for Madagascar or Guinea; when the briganteen was at Sea, whether with or without the privity of the forementioned Owners I cannot tell, she turn'd pirate and went to Newfoundland and robb'd ships.

Now that I have had occasion to mention Baldridge, I will acquaint your Lordships with a particularity told me of him by Kidd,[3] when I first examined him in Council, because you had directed in your Letter of the 25th of last October or 5th of last January, that I should inquire after some pirates kill'd in St. Maries near Madagascar. I question'd Kidd about it, and he told me Baldridge was the occasion of that Insurrection of the Natives and the death of the pirates, for that having inveigled a great number of the natives of St. Maries, men, women and children on board a ship or ships he carryed and sold them for slaves to a French Island called Mascarine or Mascaron, which treachery of Baldridges the Natives on the Island revenged on those pirates by cutting their throats. . . .

[2] For Capt. Adam Baldridge's own account of his dealings with pirates see Jameson, Privateering, pp. 180-187.

[3] It will be remembered that Captain Kidd's privateering voyage of 1695 was arranged with Bellomont in London before Bellomont sailed for New York. For Kidd's story see ibid., pp. 190-256.

348. Heads of Accusation against the Earl of Bellomont, 1700.[1]

32. The Earle of Bellomont in justification of these proceedings calumniates the people of New York of being Pirates and favourers of Piracy and breaking the Acts of navigation whereas it is evident that but one ship has for ten years past gone from thence on a Piraticall voyage and that was pretended to be commissionated by Leisler; 'Tis true that severall ships have had a constant trade to Madagascar for Negroes and some of them having lately met with India goods there which they bought at easy rates transported them to New York.

These are what I am informed by the Merchants of London will appear to be true.

March 11, 1700.

349. The Earl of Bellomont to Secretary Vernon, 1700.[1]

N. York the 6th Decr. 1700.

. . . As to the charge against me for suffering the ship New York Marchand to come hither after having been at Madagascar, I have inquir'd ab't it, and the story of that ship is this: Frederick Philips her owner had appointed her to stop at Delaware Bay, wch is 50 leagues westward of this Province, and there his son met her in the Frederick's sloop, takes out all her E. India goods and sends the Frederick's sloop and goes to Hamborough (the story whereof you know) and come to this town in the N. York Marchand. Upon notice of the ship's coming in (for the sloop I never heard of till from your selfe) I sent imediately to search the N. York Marchand, where there was nothing found but a parcel of Negros, and the trade for Negros to Madagascar was not then under a prohibition, not untill the E. India Act passed in England.[2] I defie all mankind to charge me justly wth any sort of corruption in the least degree or wth any connivance or partiality shew'd to one man or party more than another. . . .

[351] [1] N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 814. On June 24, 1726, the Board of Trade wrote to Governor Burnet that it had no accounts of the number of negroes imported into New York or New Jersey, and wished them for as long a period as he could obtain them (ibid., V. 780). The detailed list of New York importations, drawn from the Naval Officers Lists, will be found at the end of this section, no. 369.

[2] The New York duty on negroes at the beginning of the eighteenth century was 15 s. if they were imported directly from Africa, £1 10 s., if indirectly (Cal. St. P. Col., 1701, p. 567). In 1709 a duty of £3 was laid on those slaves not brought directly from Africa. Du Bois, Suppression of the Slave Trade, p. 205.

[3] "New York, Yesterday Capt. Jarret arriv'd here from Guinea with 74 Negroes" (Boston News Letter, Oct. 15, 1711). Not all the negroes intended for New York arrived there. The sloop Berry, Walter Scott commander, from Jamaica to New York, with 48 negroes, was seized by a Martinique privateer in November, 1711. Ibid., Jan. 14, 1712.

[4] If this is correct the item in the News Letter, Aug. 23, 1714, is in error: "New York Aug. 16. Arrived here are . . . Nathanael Vial from Jamaica in a Sloop, 'tis said he has 90 Negro's on Board."

[5] The report of negroes brought from the West Indies and from Africa did not tell the whole story. On July 25, 1715, Governor Hunter reported to the Board of Trade the passage of an act "to exempt Hana Martin, Doctor Christr. Cooper and Mr. George Smith from the payment of the Tax for 12 Negroes imported from South Carolina" (N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 419). From 1715 on compare this list with no. 369.

[6] Note in manuscript, "Entered from the Coast of Africa but found afterwards to have been from Madagascar." One projected importation is described in the following letter from Cadwallader Colden to a Dr. Home, Dec. 7, 1721: "S'r, I am oblidged to you for your kinde offer of buying for mee three or four slaves and that in so doing you will particularly consider my intrest. Please to buy mee two negro men about eighteen years of age I designe them for Labour and would have them strong and well made. Please likewise to buy mee a negro Girl of about thirteen years old. . . . in the bill of lading putt one on my account of risque another on my wife's and a third on Saundys that wee may have Less trouble with the duty." Colden Papers, I. 51.

N. B. That all the Negroes in the foregoing Account have been Imported by Private Traders and that none have been imported during that time by the African Company.

353. THE SOLICITOR GENERAL TO THE BOARD OF TRADE, 1713.[1]

December 22, 1713.

As to the Act for laying a duty on negroes, wine, rum and other spirits, cyder and vessels, Tho' this Act will expire March 10th, 1713; yet I submit to yr. Lordship's consideration how far it may be proper for them at Pensylvania to lay a duty on negroes, wine, rum all shipping, etc. and how far it may affect His Majesty's subjects here of which your Lordships are most proper judges. . . .

[352] [1] The entries come from the Boston News Letter, the Boston Gazette, and the Weekly Rehearsal, for the dates given; the actual customs entry is frequently a few days earlier than the date of the paper, which is the date here given.

[2] The News Letter for Aug. 15, 1715, contained notice of the arrival of Jacobs from Africa on Aug. 8. That this list is far from complete will be seen by a reference to the figures in ante, no. 351, as well as by the casual references in the newspapers. "New York, Aug. 26. Capt. Lawrence arrived from Guinea, three months Passage; we daily expect a Ship and a Sloop from thence with more Slaves." Ibid., Sept. 2, 1717.

[3] Prices of seasoned negroes in New York about 1690 ranged from £16 to £25. Their labor commanded from £5 to £6 a year (Papers of the Lloyd Family, I. 115, 147). On Jan. 27, 1723, a negro girl of seventeen was offered for sale for £45; on Apr. 19, a girl of twenty for £45; on Aug. 1, a negro man and girl for £50 and £60 respectively, on Sept. 24, a girl for £50; and on Oct. 21, a girl with a four-year-old child for £75 (O'Callaghan, Calendar of Historical Manuscripts, II. 476, 477, 479, 481). Inventories of 1729 and 1730 value negro women at £35, £40, and £45. By this time their labor was commanding £8 and £9 a year. Lloyd Family, I. 258, 261, 271, 307, 311.

Philadelphia, August 29 [1723].

355. Governor Burnet to the Board of Trade, 1726.[1]

New York, 20 Decr. 1726.

My Lords, . . . I send your Lordships herewith an account of Negroes imported to New York since 1700, which is all that could be found. There are bonds here in the Custom House for those that came directly from Africa, but no Agent of that Company has been of late appointed to demand their dues, which possibly it may be a favour in your Lordships to let the Directors of that Company know, that they may employ some body to demand their ten pr. Cent.

If I get the account from East New Jersey before this vessel sails, I will likewise enclose it. There are few Negroes, if any, imported in West New Jersey, but it is not possible for me to get an account from thence to be sent by this opportunity; but I shall obtain it as soon as can be. . . .

I have just received an account of Negroes from the Collector of Amboy, which I likewise enclose to Your Lordships. . . .

The act of 1728 was discussed by the Board of Trade, along with several other colonial acts of similar import, and a recommendation that duties be raised by some other means was sent to the colonial governors in October, 1729 (B. T. Journ., 1728-1734, pp. 64-68). The Weekly Rehearsal, Nov. 27, 1732, contained an account of the representation of the board copied from the Political State of Great Britain, for August, 1732.

this Colony with a considerable number of Negroes on Board her, in her voyage from Africa, touched at Antegua to purchase some provisions and Refreshments but landed none of her Slaves there, and then came to the Province of New Jersey, where there is no duty paid for any Slaves imported, but the owner of the vessel being desirious to import the greatest part of them into this province, if he might be allowed to pay only the duty of five ounces of plate for every head, which seemed to be a doubt in the Act for the settling the Revenue above mentioned being, it was said the ship did not come directly from Africa altho' the intention of the Legislature in that former Act was only to encourage the African Trade and so laid a double duty on slaves imported here from the West Indies, which are generally Refuse and very badd and could hardly be applicable to such slaves coming from Africa and had been nowhere landed although the ship had stop't at some other Port for refreshment before she arrived here; I therefore considered that if I did not pass that Law, none of the Slaves would have been brought hither which would have been a considerable loss to the Revenue and might have encouraged the bringing them in clandestinely, whereby the duty would have been defrauded; so that nothing but these considerations made me consent to that Law. . . .

357. The Board of Trade to the Privy Council, 1735.[1]

To the Rt. Hon'ble the Lords of the Committee of His Majesty's most Hon'ble Privy Council

My Lords, We have considered the humble petition of the Merchants and Traders of the City of Bristol, whose names are thereunto subscribed, referr'd to us by Your Lordships on the 1st day of November 1734 complaining of an Act pass'd in His Majesty's Province of New York intituled, "An Act to repeal the Act and to cancel the Bills of Credit therein mentioned, and grant unto His Majesty several duties for supporting His Majesty's Government in the Colony of New York until the first day of September which will be in the year 1737."

We have been attended upon this occasion by the Agent for the Petitioners and have heard what he had to offer in support of their petition and having considered the said Act and taken the advice of Mr. Fane one of His Majesty's Council at Law thereupon we take leave upon the whole to observe to Your Lordships that by the following Clauses of this Act it is provided that there shall be paid to his Majesty for every slave, (male or female) "of four years of age and upwards, imported directly from Africa, the quantity of five ounces or Sevil Pillar or Mexico Plate, or forty shill: in Bills of Credit made current in this Colony.

For every Negro, Mullatto or Indian Slave (male or female) of four years of age and upwards imported from all other places by land or water, the sum of four pounds in like money. . . ."

As these clauses are greatly prejudicial to the Trade and Navigation of this Kingdom, and are likewise expressly contrary to His Majesty's Instructions to the Govr of New York, by which he is directed not to pass any Act for imposing Duties upon Negroes payable by the Importer, or whereby the Trade or Navigation of this Kingdom might be any ways affected, unless a clause be inserted in such Act for suspending the execution thereof 'till his Majesty's pleasure should be known concerning the same, we should for these reasons propose to Your Lordships that the Act in question might be laid before His Majesty for his Disallowance.

But considering the Inconveniences and Confusion that might arise in the province of New York if this Act which settles funds for the support of His Majesty's Government there should be repealed before other provisions are made for the same purposes, we therefore humbly propose that this Act may be suffered to ly by for the present, and that orders may be immediately sent to His Majesty's Govr of New York to move the Council and Assembly of that Province forthwith to pass a New Law for repealing the three foregoing clauses and for providing and settling other Funds for the like purposes not liable to the same objections.

We take leave to transmit to Your Lordships the Draught of such an Instruction as we have prepared upon these heads for the Govr of New York, which, if Your Lordships should approve it, may be immediately sent to him. But if the Council and Assembly of New York shall refuse to comply with this Instruction, we should then propose that the Act in question may be laid before His Majesty for his Disallowance.[2]

WHITEHALL Augst the 6th 1735

358. ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTIONS TO GOVERNOR COSBY, 1735.[1]

[WHITEHALL, August 6, 1735.]

Whereas several Merchants and Traders of Our City of Bristol have most humbly petitioned us complaining of an Act pass'd in our [358] [1] N. Y. Col. Docs., VI. 33-34. William Cosby, governor 1732-1736.

Province of New York entituled "An Act to repeal the Act and to cancel the Bills of Credit therein mentioned and to grant unto his Majesty several Duties for supporting His Majesty's Government in the Colony of New York until the 1st day of Sep'r which will be in the year 1737," laying a Duty of five ounces of Plate or 40*s* current mony of New York upon every slave (male and female) of four years of age or upwards imported directly from Africa and four pound like mony upon every slave of the same age from any other place for all European or East India Goods Imported with proper certificates from the British Islands in the West Indies, the sum of five pounds in like mony for every £100 value prime Cost which Act having been examined by our Commissrs for Trade and Plantations is found to be directly contrary to the 18th Article of Your Instructions whereby you are expressly forbid to pass any law by which the trade or Navigation of this Kingdom may be any way affected declaring it to be our Royal Intention that no Duties shall be laid in the province under your Government upon British shipping or upon the Produce or Manufactures of Great Britain upon any pretence whatsoever. It is therefore Our Express will and pleasure that you move our Council and Assembly of our said Province forthwith to pass a New Law for repealing the three foregoing Clauses and for providing and settling other Funds for the like purposes not liable to the same objections, or at least that an Exception be made in favour of all Goods whatsoever of the Product or Manufacture of Great Britain; and that no Duty be laid on any Slave Imported payable by the Importer, and you are also to signify our Royal Intention to our Council and the Assembly of our said Province that if they do not immediately comply with this our Instruction we shall repeal the Act now complained of.[2]

[2] Instructions similar to these went to most of the colonial governors from this time to the end of the century. See Acts P. C. C., IV. 210, for those to Sir Danvers Osborn, Aug. 10, 1753.

359. The Council of New Jersey to Governor Lewis Morris, 1744.[1]

8th Decr. 1744.

Sir, . . . The next Bill rejected by the Council, was, A Bill for laying a Duty on Indian, Negroe and Mollatto Slaves, imported into this Colony.

This Bill the Council considered abstractedly from any Instructions your Excellency has in relation to the African Company, which many of the Gentlemen of the Assembly we suppose are not unacquainted with, and only weighed the Advantages and Disadvantages that would arise to the People of this Colony upon that Bill's passing into a Law. By that Bill was plainly intended an intire Prohibition of all Slaves being imported from foreign Parts, no less than a Duty of Ten Pounds being imposed on all grown Slaves imported from the West-Indies, and Five Pounds on all those directly imported from Africa. Upon the most mature Consideration the Council were of Opinion, that if that Bill, or any other Bill, discouraging the Importation of Slaves, should at this time pass into a Law, the People of this Province in general (a few Labourers only excepted) and the Farmers in particular, would be great Sufferers by it, and that for the following Reasons.

1. It is well Known, that a great Number of Labourers went out of this Province on the late Expedition to the West Indies, and that very few of them have returned; That many, for some Time past, have been going, and still are going, on the Privateering Account; by which Means Labourers Wages are become very high, and the Farmers, Trading-Men and Tradesmen, are greatly straitened for want of Labourers to carry on their Business.

2. It is also well Known, that since the Manufacture of Linnens has arrived to any tolerable Perfection in Ireland, we have had very few Servants or Labourers from that Island, and have no Reason to expect many for the Time to come.

3. The present War throughout the German Dominions, and between almost all the Powers on the Continent of Europe, give us Reason to expect no Assistance from that Quarter. And as our Sovereign is deeply engaged in a war with many powerful Princes, [359] [1] New Jersey Archives, first ser., VI. 222-223, XV. 384-385. Lewis Morris, governor of New Jersey 1738-1746. In March, 1714, New Jersey laid a duty of £10 on all negroes imported into the colony, the duty to be imposed for seven years (ibid., first ser., XIII. 541). The reason for the measure Governor Hunter alleged to be the desire to "Encourage the Importation of white Servants for the better Peopeling that Country, a Law something like that in Pensilvania haveing evidently had that effect" (Governor Robert Hunter to the Board of Trade, Aug. 27, 1714, ibid., first ser., IV. 196). In 1739 the New Jersey assembly passed a new duty measure, which was rejected by the council (ibid., XV. 30, 31, 50); in 1744 the assembly renewed its efforts and on Oct. 24 sent to the council a bill which that body rejected on the 26th. Ibid., pp. 343, 345, 351.

we have as little Reason to expect any Number of Servants from the Island of Great Britain. Wherefore we conceive, that it would be more for the Interest of the People of this Colony to encourage at this Time the Importation of Slaves, than by a Law to prohibit them altogether, and therefore we rejected that Bill.[2]

360. News Items relating to Slave Trade, 1751-1762.

May 13, 1751.[1]

To be Sold at Publick Vendue, on Friday the 17th Instant, at 10 o'clock in the Morning, at the Meal Market.

A number of likely Negro Slaves, lately imported in the Sloop Wolf directly from Africa. Those that are not disposed of on that Day, will be sold at publick Vendue the Friday following.

August 19, 1751.[2]

Likely Negroes Men and Women, imported from the Coast of Africa, also the Brigantine Warren, with her Apparel, etc. to be sold by Thomas Greenell.

New-York November 25 [1751].[3]

We hear Capt. Amory a few Days ago, spoke with Capt. Miller in the Ship Hawke, of this Port, from the Coast of Guinea; who had been several weeks on our Coast, and were very short of Provisions.

[2] Cadwallader Colden, in a letter to Micajah Perry which was probably written in 1731, explains the high cost of labor in New York by "the high rate at which Negro's are sold being at about double of their value in the West Indies and Secondly the Great Charge of mentaining them especially in cloaths by reason of a long Winter in which time likewise they can be of little use." Colden Papers (N. Y. Hist. Soc., Collections, 1918), II. 32.

On May 23, 1749, Governor Clinton wrote to the Board of Trade that fewer slaves than formerly were coming in from the African coast (N. Y. Col. Docs., VI. 510). Anthony Benezet, in his Historical Account of Guinea (1771), pp. 119-121, quotes from the anonymous diary of a surgeon who was on a New York slaver in 1750.

New York had another connection with the slave trade which sometimes affected legislation. Cadwallader Colden, making plans for the raising of revenue, wrote to Governor Clinton on Aug. 8, 1751: "it [a duty on wines and spirits] can be of no disadvantage to Trade, except in one instance, vizt. in the exportation of Spirits from North America to the Coast of Africa, for purchasing of Slaves, in which case, if thought necessary, the duty may be drawn back." N. Y. Col. Docs., VI. 745.

NEW YORK, May 4, 1752.[4]

To be Sold by Abraham Pereira Mendes, a Parcel of Likely young Negroes, Piemento, Old Copper, Coffee, etc. at the House in Smith's Fly, lately in the Occupation of Roger Pell, Inn keeper. N.B. If any Person has a Mind to purchase any of the Goods mentioned, they may enquire of Mr. Daniel Gomez.

ANTIGUA, March 14 [1761].[5]

On Thursday was brought into the Road of Bassaterre, a Sloop bound from New-York for the Coast of Africa.

NEW YORK, May 25 [1761].[6]

By a Letter from the Coast of Africa, dated 27th of February, we learn of the Arrival on that Coast, of the Schooner Little Betsey, Capt. Richards, Brig Polly, Aaront King, a Schooner, Capt. Shaw; Sloop, Capt. Molton; Brig, Capt. Nicholls, all of New York. . . . Capt. Shaw was taken, and ransomed for 100 Guineas.

NEW YORK, August 10 [1761].[7]

By Capt. Lyell from the Coast of Africa, we have advice, that Capt. Nicoll, of this port, was not cut off by the Negroes, as was some time ago published; but that he lost 40 of his slaves by an insurrection and saved his vessel.

NEW YORK, October 5 [1761].[8]

Sunday last Capt. Nicoll, whom we lately mentioned to be taken on the Coast coming from Guinea, came to Town from Rhode Island, where he arrived in a Sloop of Capt. Turrel's [Tuell?] given him by the Captain of the French Privateer. It was on the 8th of September, in Lat. 35 20; Long. 67 00, That Capt. Nicoll was taken, the Privateer Sloop had 10 Guns, with a gilt Stern, and belonged to Martinico, commanded by one Semina, who was so base as to strip him, and the Passengers of every Thing worth Notice: The Privateer had been out 21 Days, in which she had taken six Prizes, two of them Guinea Men; and that she intended to go off the Coast immediately, having met with bad Weather just before, in which he lost his Boat and Some Guns.

On Tuesday Morning last arrived the Sloop Sally, Michal Molton, Master, of this Port. On the 2d of July last he sailed from Annamabo on the Coast of Africa, with 128 Slaves: and on the 1st Instant in Lat. 28, 24, N. Long. 38, 27 W. from London, he was taken by a French Privateer Sloop belonging to Martinico, of 10 four-pounders and 110 Men, called the Phenix, Monsieur Mouchell, commander: and after taking out all the slaves and plundering the Sloop, they permitted him to proceed in her (being a dull sailer) to New-York. The Privateer had before taken 4 other Vessels, and then made the best of their Way to Martineco.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4, 1762.[9]

A Schooner belonging to this Port, Lewis Master, we hear, was lately cut off by the Negroes, on the Coast of Africa. Capt. Lewis is arrived at St. Kitts, Master of a Sloop lately commended by Capt. Handy, of this Place, who, with all his Crew, died on the Coast some time since.

361. PETITION OF THE MERCHANTS OF PHILADELPHIA, 1761.[1]

A Petition from the Merchants against the Bill for Duty on the Negros.

To the Honourable James Hamilton, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Pennsylvania, etc.

The Petition of Divers Merchants of the City of Philadelphia, Trading to His Majesty's Coloneys in the West Indies, Humbly Sheweth: That we are informed there is now a Bill Before your Honour for your assent, laying a Duty on the importation of Negros, and that it is to take place immediately on the publication.

[9] Ibid., Feb. 4, 1762.

[361] [1] Minutes of the Provincial Council, Pennsylvania Archives, VIII. 576. On Feb. 28, 1761, a bill for laying a duty on negroes and mulatto slaves imported into the province was presented to Deputy Governor Hamilton for his concurrence. He returned the bill with a reprimand for having named in it the officer of enforcement, and with an amendment postponing its operation for six months after passage. His suggestions were accepted and in its final form the measure became a law on Apr. 11, 1761 (ibid., pp. 578-579, 583, 596, 601; Pa. Arch.: Papers of the Governors, fourth ser., III. 60-61). In 1767 John Penn, deputy governor, reported to the Earl of Shelburne that this duty, £10 per head, had yielded for the preceding three years £650 annually. Ibid., p. 343.

We, the subscribers, ever desirous to extend the Trade of this Province, have seen, for some time past, the many inconveniencys the Inhabitants have suffer'd for want of Labourers and artificers, by numbers being inlisted for His Majesty's Service, and near a total Stop to the importation of German and other white Servants, have for some time encouraged the importation of Negros, and acquainted our friends and correspondents in several parts of His Majesty's dominions (who are no Way apprehensive of a Bill of this Nature), that an Advantage may be gained by the Introduction of Slaves, which will Likewise be a means of reducing the exorbitant price of Labour, and, in all probability, bring our Staple Commoditys to their usual prices; And as many of us have embarked in this Trade through the motives before mentioned, We humbly beg your honour will take into consideration the hardships we shall Labour under by such a Law taking immediate effect, when we have it not in our power to countermand our Orders or advise our friends; therefore humbly pray that such time may be allowed (before the Law takes place) as your honour shall think most Conducive to extricate your petitioners from the impending danger.

362. NOTICE OF NEW JERSEY SALES, 1761-1764.

May 21, 1761.[1]

To be Sold by Stocker and Fuller, and to be seen at Mr. Daniel Cooper's Ferry, West New-Jersey, opposite the City of Philadelphia, a Parcel of likely Negroes.

Just imported from Barbadoes, in the Ship William and Mary, [362] [1] N. J. Arch., first ser., XX. 569, from the Pa. Jour., May 21, 1761.

[2] N. J. Arch., first ser., XX. 573, from the Pa. Gazette, May 28, 1761.

George Nicholson, Master, and now lodged at Mr. Daniel Cooper's Ferry, on the Jersey Shore.

A Negroe Man, and two New Negroe Boys, who are to be sold by Willing, Morris and Company. The Purchaser to pay the Duty lately imposed by Act of Assembly, if brought into this Province.

Aug. 6, 1761.[3]

To be Sold, On Board the Schooner Hannah, lying in the River Delaware, very near Mr. Daniel Cooper's Ferry, West New Jersey, opposite the City of Philadelphia, a Cargo of likely Negroes, just imported in said Schooner, directly from the Coast of Guinea. For terms of sale apply to Thomas Riche, David Franks, or Daniel Rundle.

Oct. 22, 1761.[4]

Just imported in the Sloop Company, Captain Hodgson, from the Coast of Africa, A Parcel of Likely Negroe Slaves; Which may be seen on board said Sloop, lying off Cooper's Ferry. For Terms, apply to Samuel and Archibald M'Call, and James Wallace and Company.

Just imported from the River Gambia in the Schooner Sally, Bernard Badger, Master, and to be sold at the Upper Ferry (called Benjamin Cooper's Ferry), opposite to this City, a parcel of likely Men and Women Slaves, with some Boys and Girls of different Ages. Attendance will be given from the hours of nine to twelve o'clock in the Morning, and from three to six in the Afternoon, by W. Coxe, S. Oldman, and Company. N.B. It is generally allowed that the Gambia Slaves are much more robust and tractable than any other slaves from the Coast of Guinea, and more Capable of undergoing the Severity of the Winter Seasons in the North-American Colonies, which occasions their being Vastly more esteemed and coveted in this Province and those to the Northward, than any other Slaves whatsoever.

[4] N. J. Arch., first ser., XX. 621, from Pa. Gazette, Oct. 22, 1761. Miss Gummere quotes a comment of Anthony Benezet of Philadelphia, which may have been made concerning this cargo: "Those Negroes that were brought last year up the River and sold on the Jersey Shore opposite this City (Philadelphia) were probably of the Fully (Fuli) Nation" (Amelia M. Gummere, ed., Journal of John Woolman, p. 30). It may be remembered that Job ben Solomon (this work, II. 420-427) belonged to the Fulis, a people more closely related to the Arabs than to the pure blacks. Since they were rarely made slaves, Benezet is probably mistaken in thinking that any large number of Fulis had been imported in this cargo.

Just imported in the Brigantine Africa, Francis Moore, master, from the coast of Guinea, and to be sold by Thomas Riche, In New Jersey, opposite Philadelphia, A few likely Negro men, women, boys and girls, very reasonable for cash or short credit. N.B. The said Riche will attend the Sale from 10 to 1 o'clock, and from 2 till 5 in the afternoon.

363. Governor Josiah Hardy to the Board of Trade, 1762.[1]

Perth Amboy Jany. 20th 1762.

My Lords, . . . I found by these minutes that they intended bringing in a bill to lay a small duty on Negroes imported into this Province, but on a message from me acquainting them that his Majesty's instructions would not allow my assenting to such a Bill, they dropt it; but at the same time they represented to me the inconvenience the Province is exposed to in lying open to the free importation of Negros, when the Provinces on each side have laid duties on them; for which reason great Numbers of Negros are landed in this Province every Year in order to be run into New York and Pensylvania besides overstocking this Country with Slaves of which in the general opinion there are already too many. They have therefore desired I would lay this matter before your Lordships, as they look upon it as a great hardship, I could therefore wish Your Lordships would please to take into consideration and intercede with his Majesty to grant them such relief as in his wisdom he may think fit.[2]

[6] N. J. Arch., first ser., XXIV. 422, from Pa. Jour., Sept. 20, 1764.

[363] [1] N. J. Arch., first ser., IX. 345-346. Governor Hardy (1761-1762) repeated the substance of this communication in a letter to the Earl of Egremont Jan. 22, 1762. Ibid., p. 348.

[2] The governor's warning did not prevent the assembly from laying a duty on negroes in September, 1762 (ibid., XVII. 333-336). On May 2, 1763, Hardy wrote to the Board of Trade: "By the Intrepide Man of War I send the Bills passed at the last Sessions of the General Assembly of this Province in September, there is among them one entituled an Act for laying a duty on Negroes and Mulatto Slaves Imported into this Province, which I would not give my assent to without a suspending Clause not to take effect untill His Majesty's Pleasure shall be known, it may be proper likewise to inform Your Lordships that the reason for laying a higher duty in the Western division than in the Eastern, is that in the Province of Pennsylvania the duty is Ten Pounds proclamation on all Slaves imported, and in New York only Two Pounds currency; this consideration induced the Assembly to make such a difference in the two divisions" (ibid., first ser., IX. 382-383). The measure laid a duty of £2 in the eastern division of the province; £6 in the western division. Since the law could not go into effect until it received royal confirmation, New Jersey continued without a duty, and advertisements for small lots of negroes are not unusual in 1763 and 1764. On July 13, 1764, the Board of Trade wrote to the new governor, William Franklin: "As we have no particular Objection to the Policy of imposing a reasonable duty upon the importation of Negroes, we should have been glad to have laid the Law passed for that purpose before His Majesty for his approbation, but as the Duty is laid payable by the Importer, and a part of it is reserved in Case of re-exportation, it appears to us to be contrary in both these respects to the 26th Article of Your Instructions." This opinion was reported to the coun-

364. John Watts to Gedney Clarke, 1762.[1]

New York, 30th March 1762.

Sir, . . . He [Governor Robert Monckton] mentions to me your Scheme[2] but as I take it for granted to be now all at an end little will be necessary to say on the occasion, but that I should not have had nor still have any objection to be concernd in it, if they sell reasonable which I cannot imagine they will as things are represented to me. For this market they must be young the younger the better if not quite Children, those advanced in years will never do I should imagine a Cargo of them none exceeding thirty might turn out at fifty pounds a head gross Sales. Males are best. Such a Number as you mention we cannot easily vend, from fifty to a hundred would run high enough, but Virginia could take off a great many. Our Duty is four pound a head from the West Indies forty shillings from Africa. New Jersey pays none at all for which reason the Master might lay a mile or two below the Town and send up word.[3] . . .

365. John Watts to Gedney Clarke, 1762.[1]

New York 3d April 1762.

Sir, . . . This will barring the Danger of Sea and Enemy, be delivered you by Capt: Joseph Bragg of the Sloop Deborah belonging to Mr: Astin. Upon considering the perplexed Circumstances I was in, I could think of no better Method than to take the Cargo cil on May 22, 1765. Apparently no further action was taken immediately, but in 1769 New Jersey placed a duty of £15 on every imported negro sold in the province, thus virtually putting an end to all slave trade into New Jersey. Ibid., IX. 346 n., 447, XVII. 385.

[364] [1] Letter-Book of John Watts, Merchant and Councillor of New York (N. Y. Hist. Soc., Colls., LXI.), pp. 31-32. John Watts had extensive dealings with the West Indies, South Carolina, and Virginia. Gedney Clarke, son of Francis and Deborah Clarke of Boston and Salem and brother of John Clarke of Salem, was an active merchant of Barbados and at one time surveyor of customs of the Leeward Islands. His interest in Massachusetts is indicated by the fact that he presented to Christ Church of Boston (Old North Church) a chime of bells. Watts's many letters to him bespeak an intimate business connection. He was also a constant correspondent of Henry Laurens, many of whose letters to him will be found in this work, vol. IV., South Carolina.

[2] Apparently the scheme was for Clarke and Watts to unite in sending a vessel to Africa for slaves for the northern market. On Jan. 2 Watts wrote to Clarke that Astin, a Barbados debtor of his, had sent a sloop to New York with a rum cargo which was to be sold in New York. The sloop was then to be returned to Astin for a voyage to Guinea (ibid., p. 7). That trading in slaves was not new to Watts is shown by the entry for 1751 in the list of New Jersey importations, post., no. 370.

[3] "The Dutys on Rum, Wine and Negroes have heretofore supported our Civil List" (John Watts to James Napier, June 1, 1765, Letter-Book, p. 355). The remainder of the letter is concerned with shipments of rum and with the unsatisfactory conduct of Astin, located at Essequibo, about whom and to whom Watts frequently wrote. On May 9 Watts wrote: "I take it for granted [you] have not succeeded in your Scheme for purchasing Negroes, nor indeed any thing else, by the best accounts we can get." Letter-Book, p. 45.

to myself, a Bottomry Bill on the Sloop, for what may be about the Ballance of my Acct: and send both to you to do as you judge right and fit on all Sides; both as I understand you to be Mr. Astin's friend and as it is proper you should know the grounds upon which I proceed, I send you a Copy of Messrs: Maxwell and Udnys Letter to me and another to Capt: Lowell which paint things in such abominable Colours that I am determined to settle my Affairs with that Gentleman while it is in my Power, and decline any farther intercourse least I should hereafter be dragg'd into a repetition of these vexatious Inconsistancys.

He first proposed that I should fit the Sloop properly for a Guinea Voyage credit him for a Loading and send her to Esequebo, she was accordingly so fitted a Cargo on board (not all that she has at present) and on the point of sailing, when I received Maxwell and Udneys Letter which put an end to that Scheme.

If this proposal faild I was next to take a freight for Barbados if such a thing could be obtained, and if that faild too and nothing better offerd I was even to return her to him in Ballast, so intent was his mind upon the Guinea Voyage after he had persuaded Capt: Bragg to undertake it, who has a thorough experience in that Business. There is a kind of an intimacy between Messrs: Maxwell and Udny and Capt: Bragg, and as soon as he came to understand their representation of Mr: Astin he trembled to think of returning to Esequebo upon Mr: Astins strength only, for fear of being shut up there and both disappointed and deceivd too as he had been before, this led him willingly to throw himself upon your protection, in hopes that something more effectual might be done than he believ'd Mr: Astin could carry through.[2] . . .

366. News Items relating to Slave Trade, 1763-1767.

New York, July 25, 1763.[1]

Saturday last Capt. Roger Richards arrived here from Africa, in 8 Weeks; where he left the Capts. Waterman and Easton of Connecticut; and Farmar from New-Brunswick.

[2] The remainder of this letter and the next three or four deal with the affairs of the unfortunate Mr. Astin, but there is no further mention of a Guinea voyage in conjunction with him.

[366] [1] Newport Mercury, July 25, 1763. The New York Gazette yields the following clearances to Africa: 1764, Feb. 9, sloop Little David, Thos. Cornwell; Aug. 2, snow Charming Nancy, Francis Haynes. To these can be added the Gambia, John Campbell (Letter-Book of John Watts, p. 214); 1765, Aug. 1, sloop Sarah, John Reynolds. The Success, Richards, and the schooner Nelly, Devonshire, entered from Africa on June 27 and Oct. 3, 1765.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10, 1766.[2]

Capt. Perry, in the snow Nancy, from Africa to Santa Croix, of this port, after sailing the second time from the island of St. Thomas, on that coast, being six days out, sprung a leak, which encreased on them so much, that they were glad to quit their vessel, taking with them all their slaves, in number 59, and went on board a Marblehead vessel, and arrived safe at Barbados.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30 [1766].[3]

The Captains Harrison and Arskine of this Port, are both dead on the coast of Africa.

LONDON [1767].[4]

They write from Senegal, that the crew of the snow Juba, of New-York, had mutinied against the captain and officers at Sierraleon, whom they sent on shore in the long boat, but the snow was three days after recovered by one of his Majesty's cruizers.

367. SLAVES BELONGING TO THE MORAVIANS OF PHILADELPHIA, 1766.[1]

Negro Slaves and Servants belonging to the Members of the Moravian Congregation in Philadelphia, in 1766.

John Rebo, b. 1721, in Angola, Guinea, Africa. In 1733 taken to Jamaica, W. I., and in 1737 to New York. Baptized Oct. 19, 1747, by Bishop J. C. F. Cammerhoff. . . .

Silpa Fortune (baptized 1761, Anna Elizabeth), b. Jan. 1, 1730.

Tobias, b. 1721, in Ibo Nation, Africa, brought to America in 1763.

Woodridge, b. 1748, in Guinea, Africa, taken to Barbadoes, W. I., 1756, and to Philadelphia in 1764.

Dinah, b. 1740, in Guinea, Africa, brought to Philadelphia in 1756.

Flora, b. 1725, in Ibo Nation, Guinea, Africa, brought to Pennsylvania in 1735.

Rose, b. 1726, in Guinea, Africa, brought here in 1736. . . .

[367] [1] Notes and Queries relating to Interior Pennsylvania, I. 215. Those slaves born in this country have been omitted from the list, the interest of which to this work is in the unusual attempt to make some record of birth of African slaves, and of their landing in America.

368. News Items relating to Slave Trade, 1770, 1797, 1805.

New York, November 29 [1770].[1]

On Wednesday the 21st Inst. arrived here the Sloop Amity, Captain David Harrison, in 6 Weeks from the River Gambia. He brings Advice, that Captain Morrison, late of the Brig Elizabeth, (belonging to London, but which sailed from this Port about June last) together with his whole Crew, died in that River, where the Brig remained when Capt. Harrison left it.

Philadelphia, February 23 [1797].[2]

A cause of considerable interest, to the credit of our government, and to the credit of the Jurisprudence of this State, was tried in the district court on Monday; it appeared that the Lady Walterstorff, a ship belonging to New-York [3] arrived in the Delaware a short time ago, and upon proper information, she was libelled with her tackle, cargo, etc. under a law of the United States prohibiting the traffic in men.[4]

Upon the seizure of the vessel, two of the unfortunate Africans, that had been stolen from their native country, were found on board, together with several suits of iron such as hand-cuffs, neck yokes, leg-bolts, etc. packed up carefully in casks, and written documents completely authenticating the detail of the voyage to Africa, from the first equipment at New-York to her coming into this port, after the sale of a cargo of one hundred and fifty men, it appeared that the ship after leaving New York, took a lading at St. Croix, where they obtained a set of Spanish papers, and under a foreign flag pursued the traffic along the coast of Africa, and returned with the slaves to the same port, where they were all sold, saving only the two persons found on board; one of whom a man nick named Bacchus was brought forward at the trial, he could speak no language but that of his native country, the other, a woman, is hired as a domestic in the Jerseys, both having been liberated. The ship is confiscated and the penalty

[368] [1] Mass. Gazette and News Letter, Dec. 7, 1770.

[2] Newport Mercury, Mar. 1, 1797. New York had not forbidden the trade to her citizens and New York merchants were disposing of slaves in the West Indies, as occasional bits of evidence make unmistakable. The Union, Batty (?), of New York arrived at Surinam from Africa on July 11, 1791 (Salem Gazette, Sept. 6, 1791). The brig Eliza, Barnard, cleared for Africa on Aug. 8, 1792, the Trusty and the Union entered from Africa on Sept. 26 and Nov. 7 of that year (N. Y. Jour., Aug. 8, Sept. 26, Nov. 7). Among the New York merchants engaged in this traffic were Lynch and Stoughton, correspondents of Perkins and Burling of Cape François (Briggs, Cabot Family, II. 481, 482). The Concord of New York was captured by the French at the Isles de Los in 1799. Charleston Gazette, Oct. 30, 1799.

[3] New York had apparently no desire to acknowledge the ownership of this vessel: "New York, March 16. The brigantine Lady Walsterstorff lately seized in the port of Philadelphia for a breach of the laws of the United States, it is said is not the vessel called by that name belonging to that port." Newport Mercury, Mar. 21, 1797.

[4] Mar. 22, 1794: "An act to prohibit the carrying on the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country." Statutes at Large, I. 347.

incurred by the law will be levied on the owner, who is a man of opulance.[5]

July 10, 1805.[6]

The brig Washington, capt. Harner, from Philadelphia to the west coast of Africa, was cast away on a reef of rocks off Cape Vine, on the 10th day of May and the brig and cargo lost, but all hands saved and taken prisoners. Capt. Harner came passenger in the sloop Juliet, from Goree to Charleston.

[5] "Philadelphia, March 9. Yesterday the brig Lindamen, Captain M'Leran, was seized (on her applying to be cleared out for Santa Cruz) for contravening the law of the United States prohibiting vessels from fitting out in America for the purpose of supplying foreignors with slaves. She is supposed to be owned by the same persons who owned the Lady Walterstoff, the ship recently condemned for the like practices. On searching this brig a great quantity of hand cuffs, chains and other shakles were discovered, as well as muskets, swords, shot, standards for net work, etc. some concealed in the well room, and the rest among the ballast." Newport Mercury, Mar. 21, 1797.

[6] Charleston Courier, July 10, 1805. This vessel continued in the slave trade, though not in the hands of the Philadelphia owners: "The brig Washington, formerly of Philadelphia, but purchased on the Coast by capt. Trask, was cut off by the natives at Ryie, in the River Gambia, on the 1st October. Two of her crew were killed, and one made his escape. The captain was on shore during this transaction. She had on board 38 slaves" (ibid., Jan. 10, 1807). The fact that no New York nor Philadelphia vessels appear in the list of those delivering cargoes of negroes in Charleston between 1804 and 1807 by no means proves that there were no vessels from these two cities engaged in the slave traffic, but rather suggests that they found greater profit in selling in the West Indies. In 1805 the Benjamin of New York, Captain Newell, with slaves for Havana, was captured (ibid., May 3, 4, 1805, Dec. 27, 1806). The Bellona, 106 days from Africa and in want of food and water, reported on Dec. 27, 1806, was a New York ship.

DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE HISTORY OF THE SLAVE TRADE TO AMERICA

ELIZABETH DONNAN

Professor of Economics and Sociology in Wellesley College

VOLUME IV
THE BORDER COLONIES AND

WASHINGTON, D. C.

PUBLISHED BY CARNEGIE INSTITUTION OF WASHINGTON

1935

PREFACE

The method pursued in this, the fourth and final volume of the series of documents dealing with the slave trade before 1808, is the same as that used in volume III. One colony, South Carolina, receives intensive treatment; others are dismissed more summarily. The reasons which seem to justify such an allotment of space are two. Throughout the eighteenth century Charleston was by far the most important of the continental markets and it is there that one can best study the nature of the traffic and its economic effects. In addition, for this colony there exist the illuminating letters of Henry Laurens, material for which at present other southern colonies offer no counterpart. For the seventeenth century, during which the trade of Maryland and Virginia was of greater significance and might well have received fuller treatment, the sources are meagre and unsatisfactory. In part, as a result of this lack of material, many of the hopes entertained at the beginning of this work have not been fulfilled, yet if the unanswered questions and the unexplored fields suggest to future students promising possibilities, the series will have accomplished one of its purposes.

In the preparation of this volume the cordial co-operation of the officers of the South Carolina Historical Society, the Charleston Library Society, the Historical Commission of South Carolina, and the Virginia Historical Society has placed the editor under the greatest obligation. Many of those mentioned in earlier volumes have also aided in bringing this one to completion, and to them the editor repeats her expression of gratitude for their assistance.

THE BORDER COLONIES

The slave trade of the border colonies, like that of those to the north of them, had two aspects, the importation of slaves and the carrying of them to other colonies, but the emphasis must here be shifted. In these provinces the importation of slaves was far more important than the carrying trade, which until after the Revolution was almost solely for their own markets. Many of their vessels brought in small lots of negroes from the West Indies, but their commerce was on a restricted scale and they sent few ventures directly to Africa. When contrasted with the traffic of Rhode Island their trading activity was insignificant, while a contrast with South Carolina dwarfs their not inconsiderable importation. Though it continued over a long period it never, even in times of prosperity, reached numbers approaching those of the southern colony.

The materials for the economic history of Maryland, if they still exist, are yet to be gathered together. This dearth of available information is especially noticeable when one attempts a consideration of the slave trade of the colony. We know that negroes were present not long after the first settlers under the Proprietor arrived, and that importation continued through much of the eighteenth century. At the time of the establishment of the Company of Royal Adventurers trading to Africa (1663) Maryland was not sufficiently prosperous to contract for an entire cargo, as that company desired. Up to this time she had obtained her negroes by ones and twos from Virginia and the West Indies. By 1677 however George Thompson of Maryland was urging the Royal African Company to take account of Maryland's need of negroes, and the records of that body indicate that some attention was given to his plea.[1] With the end of the monopoly in 1698 and the increased activity of the separate traders, the number of negroes brought into Maryland increased but in no spectacular fashion. Purchase here, as in Virginia, fluctuated with prosperity and depression in the tobacco industry, but no evidence has come to light which indicates that prosperity brought speculative buying far beyond the needs of the colony. Nor is there reason to believe that the colony felt at any time a pressing necessity to check importation because of the menacing numbers of an alien race.[2] Duty acts were frequently passed but they were probably intended as revenue measures. English merchants objected to that of 1715, not because it imposed a restrictive duty but because it discriminated against English vessels by exempting from duty negroes imported in vessels owned in the colony.[3] A Maryland duty act was also under criticism in the Board of Trade in 1728, but no such measure passed by this colony was ever disallowed.[4]

DuBois says with truth that by the time of the Revolution the importation of negroes was slight. In 1771 a duty of £8 to £9 probably brought it entirely to an end for the time and at the close of the war the importation of foreign slaves was definitely forbidden. This prohibition was re-enacted in 1796 and again, in slightly amended form, in 1797.[5]

Maryland's later connection with the trade consisted in the buying and selling of negroes in the West Indies or the landing of cargoes in Charleston—in all of which Baltimore merchants were engaged. Messrs. Samuel and John Smith, William van Wyck, John Hollins, and Stewart and Plunkett, all of Baltimore, were interested in this trade about 1788 and such traffic continued a part of Baltimore commerce long after 1808.[6]

Our knowledge of the first introduction of negroes to Virginia rests upon the concise, oft-quoted, and much-discussed statement of John Rolfe: "About the last of August [1619] came in a dutch man of warre that sold us twenty Negers."[7] This brief record has been the subject of many conjectures, but little positive knowledge can be added to it. One of the perennial questions concerns the connection of this vessel with the Treasurer, owned by Robert Rich and known to have been in Virginia and the Bermudas with a cargo of slaves in 1619. A year before, Robert Rich, soon to become the second Earl of Warwick, had with other London worthies obtained a charter for African trade. Though this charter contained no specific reference to trade in negroes, it is by no means unlikely that Rich, already deeply involved in colonial interests, may have conceived of the plantation on the continent as a profitable market for slaves. The possibilities of tobacco were by this time evident and it must have been known to Rich and his fellows that much of the Spanish tobacco culture was carried on by negro labor. That his interest in African trade was not unconnected with his interest in American colonization is a plausible surmise, though it can be nothing more. He may have intended either to stock large land grants in Virginia and the Somers Islands with negroes or to enter upon the sale of slaves on a large scale. Whatever the project, the change in the Virginia government probably made it impossible of accomplishment and there is to-day little chance of determining whether the landing of the first twenty negroes in Virginia was part of some abortive colonial project on the part of a group of Englishmen or merely the accidental venture of an unnamed Dutch trader.[8]

The arrival of this group was not followed by immediate negro importation into Virginia, though abundance of laborers and large profits in tobacco may well have been connected in the minds of the planters. Not until after the Restoration, when England herself had actively entered the slave trade, did a Virginia importation large enough to be significant come into existence. Before this time the home government had little reason to encourage a trade whose profits went largely to the Dutch and which might interfere with the lucrative business of transporting servants to the plantations.[9] Dutch control of the trade could scarcely be destroyed until England could create a strong company, an impossible achievement till the civil wars were over. However, the negro population slowly increased between 1620 and the beginning of active importation, toward the end of the century.

A "List of the Living in Virginia", Feb. 16, 1624, included twenty-two negroes.[10] One of these was landed from the Treasurer, one had been brought in by the James in 1621, one by the Margaret and John in 1622, and one by the Swan in 1623.[11] The last three vessels had come from England with passengers and supplies, and the negroes were probably personal servants of the passengers. One negro we know had died since 1619, possibly two. For 1625 the muster rolls give twenty-three negroes.[12] From a study of headrights recorded for the negroes Bruce estimates the following importations from 1635, the year in which the first headright for a negro is recorded:

1635	26	1638	30	1643	18
1637	28	1642	7	1656	30[13]

The total number reported in the colony in 1649 was three hundred, in a population of fifteen thousand whites.[14]

There is little basis for even a plausible surmise as to how much of this annual addition to the negro population came from England, how much from the West Indies, how much from Africa by way of Spanish booty or by trade with the Dutch or the New Englanders. That by each of these methods occasional negroes were brought into Virginia we may be sure,[15] but there is no means of knowing how frequent were such episodes as are illustrated in the documents which follow. How many immigrants brought a negro or two from England? How many ship-captains had one, two, or even more to sell on each voyage? Where did they obtain them? The inhabitants of Virginia were forbidden to trade with the neighboring Dutch, yet it is scarcely conceivable that such an injunction was scrupulously

For 1639 Menefie is credited with 15, Henry Perry with 12 (see Neill, Virginia Carolorum, p. 187n.). In 1652 Thomas Goodrich brought seven negroes into Virginia with him. *Va. obeyed.[16] The Dutch were near at hand. They were enterprising and venturesome traders. They possessed a commodity which Virginia needed and offered a vent for a commodity which Virginia wished to sell. In 1660 the colonists took a decided step in encouraging Dutch trade by exempting from the export duty of 10 s. per hogshead all tobacco sold to the Dutch in exchange for negroes:[17]

> If the said Dutch or other forreiners shall import any negro slaves, They the said Dutch or others shall, for the tobacco really produced by the sale of the said negro, pay only the impost of two shillings per hogshead, the like being paid by our owne nation.

The establishment of the English African Company in 1663 by no means assured the colony of negroes. There is little indication that this company ever attempted to supply Virginia, and indeed at this time there was little incentive to send to the more remote market negroes who could be sold in the West Indies. Virginia tobacco, cut off from free access to European markets by the Navigation Acts and too plentiful for English needs, had entered upon a period of price depression which meant poverty for the planter. He was during the years following the Restoration in no condition to compete with West Indian rivals and it is not to be wondered at that the Company of Merchants trading to Africa gave scant attention to Virginia.[18] The Royal African Company of 1672, as will be seen from occasional references which follow, made some effort to send negro cargoes here. In the month of January, 1674, it freighted vessels which were to carry 650 negroes to this colony. In planning its trade for 1676 Barbados, Nevis, Jamaica, and Virginia were the four colonies whose markets were estimated. At the same time the company took precautions to see that Virginia developed no direct African trade of her own. Instructions to royal governors adjured them to give every possible encouragement to the company.[19] Yet even to this company

[16] Massachusetts Historical Society, Collections, fourth ser., IX. 134n. In 1633 William Tucker asked the Privy Council to prevent the Dutch from trading to Virginia (Alexander Brown, Genesis of the United States, II. 1034), yet a rumor of prohibition of trade with the Dutch in 1647 brought forth from the governor, council, and burgesses of Virginia a violent protest against such a policy and an invitation to the Dutch to continue their trade (Journals of the House of Burgesses, 1619-1659, ed. McIlwaine, p. 74). The passage of the act prohibiting all trade with foreigners, Oct. 3, 1650, was met by another indignant protest (C. H. Firth and R. S. Rait, Acts and Ordinances of the Interregnum, II. 425-529; Journals of Burgesses, 1619-1659, pp. 75-78), and in 1663 John Bland of London, on behalf of the planters of Virginia and Maryland, protested against the exclusion of the Dutch. *Cal. the demand of Virginia was of small moment as compared with the more insistent and more profitable needs of the West Indies.

Despite the habitual neglect of the colony by English purveyors of slaves the negro population of Virginia slowly grew. In 1661 Nicholas Ware, of Rappahannock County, gave bond to John Vassall, merchant of Barbados, in payment of four good negroes.[20] In 1662 Richard Lee obtained headrights for 80 negroes; in the same decade Scarborough had grants for 39 and Carter for 20.[21] In 1671 Governor Berkeley reported that there were 2000 negroes then in the colony, though there had not been above two or three ships with negroes in seven years.[22] In the nineties a study of the land patents shows headrights for negroes for 25, 27, 64, 70, 79, 84, though these are the exceptional and not the usual numbers.[23] By the end of the century the number of blacks in the colony was estimated at 6000, in 1708 it was reported as 12,000,[24] with a total importation between 1698 and 1708 of 6369. One evidence of this increase in the negro population is the frequency of the laws regulating the conduct of negroes.[25] By 1730 there were about 30,000 negroes in the colony, perhaps a quarter of the population,[26] and by 1770 the number of whites and blacks was nearly equal.[27]

For prices during the seventeenth century we have occasional suggestions. Nicholas Ware, in the purchase to which reference has already been made, paid 8617 pounds of tobacco for his four negroes, with tobacco selling for about two pence a pound. In 1672 the company offered to supply slaves at £18 per head, a price higher than it asked in Barbados. Byrd wrote of giving his note for two negroes and of paying £21 for a negro girl about fifteen years old; William Fitzhugh, in 1690, suggested a price ranging from £16 to £20.[28] One assertion can be made with confidence, not only for this century but for the next as well, that is, that the Virginia price fluctuated little as compared with that of South Carolina. Probably an average price of £18 to £20 prevailed throughout most of the second half of the seventeenth century and a range of £28 to £35 in the next half-century. During the second half of the century the average may have reached £40 sterling.[29]

That the history of the slave trade to Virginia has heretofore consisted in large part of an account of the efforts of the assembly to impose duties, prohibitive or otherwise, results partly from the fact that the acts of the Virginia legislature and the action of the Board of Trade are easily obtainable, while other significant material relating to the subject is elusive. A second reason is undoubtedly that many writers on this subject have been interested to demonstrate the early and persistent antipathy of Virginia to the trade. The unsupported statement that thirty-three Virginia acts intended to put a stop to the importation of negroes were disallowed in England, once made, has been often repeated, but no careful study of the circumstances under which these acts were passed, the purpose or purposes which lay behind them, the conflict of interests which they represented, or even the motives of the British government has ever been made. Some small contribution to such subjects the editor hopes may be found here, but the material presented is by no means sufficient to satisfy the student interested in these and similar questions.

[2] Kemp, who was an agent of Lord Baltimore, went on to say that as yet he had done nothing about executing this order save to ask advice, the time of year being unseasonable for carrying it out. Since the first colonists under the proprietary charter had been in Maryland nearly four years it is most unlikely that this order refers to the earliest purchase of negroes. Scharf surmised that Richard Thompson brought one, purchased in Barbados, when he landed with the Ark and the Dove in 1634. J. T. Scharf, History of Maryland (1879), I. 66.

An act of Sept. 17, 1681, removed any doubt which might have existed concerning the status of negroes in Maryland by providing that all negroes already imported or to be imported were slaves for life and their children after them. Ibid., VII. 203-204.

[6] [1] P. R. O., T 70: 61, pp. 2-3. The Royal African Company of 1672, as well as its predecessor, found the West Indian markets much more lucrative than those of the northern continent and therefore paid slight attention to Maryland and Virginia, but on July 24, 1677, the company received a request from Mr. George Thompson for a supply of negroes for Maryland. This was referred to the committee of shipping for consideration (T 70: 77). Up to this time most of the negroes brought to Maryland probably came from Barbados, yet one finds surprisingly few traces of such trade. The record of one voyage in 1686 suggests what one assumes was a common transaction: "they spoke a ship from Barbadoes, with slaves and sugar consigned to Maryland and intending to load tobacco." A Frenchman in Virginia (1923), p. 10.

7. CASE OF THE MARGARET, 1693.[1]

Legal proceedings alledging that in contravention of two Statutes of Parliament,[2] William Burnett, gentleman, not being an Englishman, master of the ship Margarett with a crew of which three fourths were not English, on the 25th of December 1692 imported into St. Mary's River in St. Mary's County, divers goods and merchandise not taken aboard in England, Wales, or Berwick upon Tweed, having sailed in the said ship from England to Barbadoes and from thence to St. Mary's River aforesaid. For which causes the said imported goods are forfeited. . . .

The said William Burnett says the charge of a breach of the laws made against him by the Information is illegal and insufficient, for Negroes are not goods nor commodities intended by the said Statutes, and by no law whatsoever pay any duty or custom either for Importation or Exportation. . . .

[3] Instructions for Captain Goodhand's next voyage are to be found in T 70: 61, under dates of Dec. 23, 1686, and Feb. 21, 1687. His cargo of 220 negroes was directed to York River, Va., to be delivered to Christopher Robinson, William Churchill, and Dudley Diggs. In other respects the instructions are identical with these.

[4] The signers are doubtless those members of the Royal African Company who were serving on the committee of shipping. Wm. Bovary appears in other places as William des Bovery. The signatures to the instructions of 1687 indicate that an election had taken place between the time of these instructions and that date. Gabriel Roberts had become subgovernor, George Bonn deputy governor. The new committee contained William Sedgewick, Peter Joy, Abraham Hill, John Cooke, Thomas Heatley, Robert Williamson, Thomas Niccolls, not on this list, and had lost John Morgan, Henry Tulse, Francis Hopegood, William Ivatt, John Morice, Jeffery Jefferies, John Perry (Pery), Jeremy Sambrooke, John Ashley, John Bence, and John Short. 8. Petition of Edward Willy, 1694.[1]

March 1, 1694.

Produced by his Exncy.[2] petition of one Edward Willy Merchant preferred to his Exncy the Governr. of Barbadoes, together with the said Governrs. Lett'r to his Exncy. here, in favour of the Petitioner the Petition setting forth that one Thomas Jones had knowingly bought of Capt. Thomas Hill Commander of the Ketch Adventure, a couple of Negro's which the said Hill had brought clandestinly away from Barbado's contrary to Law, therefore prayed that the same might be again restored to the Right owner, So that he as Security for the said Hill might not be damnifyed. Then produced a paper of the said Jones in Answer to the said Peticion whereby was signifyed that he did purchase of the said Hill two Negro's one for 7600 l. of tob and the other for tenn Thousand pds. of tob: wch was by him duely paid, withall setting forth that after his purchase of the same made, he understood the said Negro's did belong to a Plantacion in Barbado's and had a hand in the Plot, therefore were sent on Board the said Hills Vessel to be hid by two of the Seamen and were Accordingly hid, Unknown to the said Hill untill two days after his departure from Barbado's, as the said Hill told the said Jones, And further said that to secure himself of the hazard of their Lives, he would dispose of them, And that if the said Jones would not keep them he the said Hill had Chapmen enough for to take them off his hands.

Ordered that the Attorneys be consulted therein, And their Opinion and Answer upon the same to be given, with all Expedition.[3]

Whether Maryland was more punctilious than were other colonies about the status of the negroes brought to her shores, or whether it happened that captains actually carried more kidnapped negroes to Maryland than to other markets, it is a fact that a larger volume of the Maryland material discovered relates to the investigation of alleged kidnapping or to the return of negroes to their homes than is the case with any other colony. For the most famous account, that of Job ben Solomon, see this work, II. 414-427; see also J. H. Brackett, The Negro in Maryland (1890), p. 30.

II. Proceedings of the Assembly, 1696.[1]

May 11, 1696.

Whereas Major John Thompson Navall Officer at the head of the Bay having received 30 s. impost duty for three negroes imported by Mr. John Moll, which negroes are not intended to be exposed for Sale according to the Act therefore.

Tis the Opinion of this house that Major Thompson ought to refund Mr. Moll the sd Summe of 30 s.

[2] In May, 1696, this duty was increased to 20 s., the act providing for the increase to be in effect one year (ibid., XIX. 321, 363, 366, 368, 370, XXXVIII. 80-81). The duty of 20 s. was again laid by acts of 1699, 1704, 1708, 1712, and 1715 (Bacon, Laws, July 22, 1699; Md. Arch., XXVI. 289-292, XXVII. 371-372, XXX. 165, 326-331). The legislation of 1715 freed from the duty importers who carried negroes in vessels owned by inhabitants of the province. This exemption furnished the ground for the complaint of the London merchants in 1731 that the Maryland act of 1715 discriminated against them, as of course it did.

12. Petition of George Lewis, 1697.[1]

To his Exncy. Francis Nicholson Esqr. Capt. Generll. and Governr. in chief in and over his Maj'tys Province and Territory of Maryland.

The humble Petition of George Lewis Marriner Sheweth That your Petitioner by the death of Captn. Robt. Roberts Comandr. of the Ship Fly, now riding in Leonards Creek in Petuxent River is become Master thereof.

That by one of the owners instructions he finds himselfe obliged to ship another Mate that may be a carefull sober man and th't understands the Guinea Trade and has a family in England else not proceed to Guinea but trade between Barbados and Maryland, till further orders Received from his said owners wch said instruction your Petitioner finds it morally impossible to be complyed with for these following reasons.

1st Such a Mate enjoyn'd to be shipt not being to be had; he knows not any way or means whereby to purchase a proper loading to go to the Barbados with having neither credit nor effects sufficient wherewithall to do it, besides the Ship is indebted above 240 ll. for Seamens wages wch if your Petitioner should carry the Ship to Barbados, must necessarily be paid there, and for want of effects and creditt to discharge the same would occasion the Sale of the Vessell and overthrow the Voyage.

2nd Your Petitioner being wholly a stranger in the Countrey cannot possibly give the security the officers require for complying with the laws of the Countrey[2] having apply'd himselfe to severall persons that are concern'd with the owners who all of them refuse saying they have no such orders, for wch said reasons he is advised by all persons th't knows his case and that are well wishers to the Owners for to proceed the Voyage for which the men are Shipt and are willing to go and to desist going to Barbados, he having got a Mate that understands the other Voyage, and is every way qualified except his having a family in England. All wch yo'r Petitioner humbly lays before your Exncy. in behalfe of the owners and th't you would [be] favourably pleased to give such Order to the Officers for his dispatch as to your Exncys. wisdom and prudence shall seem meet; he being ready and willing to satisfy all manner of dutyes fees and other charges by way of goods he having no ready money, and

[2] During the consideration of the measure of 1698 the merchants and planters interested in Maryland and Virginia petitioned for open trade and protested against the conduct of the African Company. L. F. Stock, Proceedings and Debates of the British Parliaments, II. 217, 236.

[14] [1] C. O. 5: 716, no. 66i. See post, no. 20, for the letter which accompanied this account. It is to be observed that with few exceptions the importation into Maryland took place in the summer months. This was also the case with the Virginia trade. On May 28, 1698, a petition of Edward Carleton of London was read in the House of Lords, asking that the petitioner be excused from the penalties imposed by the act of 1698: "That yo'r pet'rs sent out a ship lately on a trading voyage, and therein also laded a cargo of goods and merchandizes propper for Affrica to purchase negros to carry to the northern plantations in America; but ordered the said ship to trade abroad so long that she might not arrive from Guiny till after the winter should be over, it not being propper to bring negros to those cold countries in that season." Stock, Proceedings and Debates, II. 239.

[2] See post, no. 16.

[3] Captain Carnaby on his arrival in London made affidavit that, after carrying negroes from Calabar to Maryland, he was not allowed to sail from Maryland to London with a cargo without convoy, which meant a long delay (C. O. 5: 1314, 41a, M 5); for further account of the Dolphin's protest over convoy see post, no. 74 and n. 4.

[4] See post, no. 17 and n. 2.

[5] C. O. 5: 716, no. 66ii. Endorsed: "Maryland. List of Negroes imported into Maryland from Xmas 1707 to Christmas 1708. Rec'ed 11 May, Read 18 July, 1709, referr'd to in Col. Seymour's L'r of the 18th Novr. 1708." In the report made by the Board of Trade to the House of Commons Jan. 27, 1709, seven vessels, all belonging to separate traders, were listed as having carried slaves into Virginia or Maryland. Of these, six appear here as delivering cargoes in Maryland: Young Marget, 280; Mary Crookshank, 274; Queen Anne, 90; Delight, 106; Prosperous, 100; Jno. and Constance, 285. P. S. Feb. 21 [1700]. A letter having been communicated to us from Hen. Munday, Commander of the John Hopewell of London who has been plundered upon the coast of Guinea, by a pirate named Henry King, who formerly used the Pennsylvania trade, and nine of his men having run away with King, we send you their names, that if any of them happen to come into your Government you may cause them to be apprehended.[2] intended voyage to Guinea and Maryland, whose loss would be the ruin of himself and the ship's proprietors. Prays therefore, that his recognizance may be discharged." Hist. MSS. Comm., Manuscripts of the Duke of Portland, VIII. 357-358.

[7] In a record of Jan. 8, 1708, the Alexander, 160 tons, 12 guns, 26 men, is to sail for Guinea and Virginia, but on Feb. 29, 1708, Sir Thomas Webster and others "Petition to clear Alexander for Guinea, then with Slaves to Patuxant R. Md." (Acts of the Privy Council, Colonial, II. 492, 542-543). The item in the Acts gives the name of the captain as Giles Love, and loads the vessel with "staves", unquestionably a misreading of "slaves". In October permission was granted to the Providence, Thomas Johnson, and the Dolphin, Samuel Payne (140 tons, 10 guns, 26 men), to sail from London to Guinea and Maryland. Ibid., p. 544.

[8] These figures reduce considerably those of Colonel Darnel, who testified before the House of Commons in 1710: "Colonel Darnel of Maryland, a Gentleman of admirable Understanding, and known Worth and Integrity, was pleas'd to affirm at the Bar of the House of Commons, the last Sessions of Parliament, viz. That since the Trade to Africa had been laid open by the Act of Ten per Cent. Duty, the Separate Traders had imported into Maryland upwards of six Thousand Negroes, the Company never having sent one thither since they were a Joint-Stock; and that by the additional Assistance of which Number of Slaves, they continu'd annually to make 24,000 Hogsheads of Tobacco more than formerly, which are sufficient Lading for Forty Sail of stout Ships per Annum to import the same into Britain; which, in the first place, is so great an Advantage to the Planters abroad; secondly, such a considerable Encouragement to our Navigation and Merchants at home; and thirdly, brings so vast an Income into Her Majesty's Exchequer, that they are Benefits worthy of a Parliamentary Consideration." A True State of the Present Difference between the Royal African Company and the Separate Traders, 1710, pp. 35-36.

Though the testimony that the African Company left the trade of Maryland and Virginia entirely to the separate traders is almost unanimous, it must not be taken with complete literalness. Occasionally the company directed vessels to these colonies or considered the wisdom of so doing (ante, no. 6, n. 1). On Mar. 6, 1719, the company received a letter from Barbados which reported that slaves could at that time be sold to better advantage in Maryland or Virginia than in the West Indies. T 70: 6, p. 90.

[15] [1] Cal. St. P. Col., 1700, p. 73. Blakiston was governor of Maryland from 1699 to 1702. On Nov. 13, 1699, Henry Munday, then off Cape Mesurado ("Mounteradoe") wrote to his owners, Pettet and Company of London, that he had been attacked and plundered by the pirate Henry King. His letter, read in a meeting of the Board of Trade on Feb. 20, 1700, prompted the board to write to Maryland, whither Munday was bound, as well as to several other colonies. Ibid., 1699, pp. 519-520; 1700, p. 75.

[2] On receiving this communication, June 27, 1700, the Maryland council issued a proclamation for the seizure of the pirate and his men (Md. Arch., XXV. 94). Captain Munday's disaster did not prevent him from bringing a cargo of negroes into Maryland about a month after the receipt of this news: "August 1, 1700 . . . on the 24th of the last moneth Capt. Passenger gave me an account that the said Henry Moonday, Commander of the John Hopewell, was gon up to Herring Bay in Maryland, and that he had 400 negroes on board. After the misfortune by the pyrates his mate did him an extraordinary piece of service by being too hard for the pyrates, and bringing to him a sloop" (Cal. St. P. Col., 1700, p. 449). Governor Blakiston, on Aug. 6, wrote that Munday, who had then been in Maryland a fortnight, had brought 300 negroes, and had made no report of trouble with pirates. Later letters accused Munday of having disposed of goods which belonged to the African Company. Ibid., pp. 460, 462, 464-465, 624, 629.

The affairs of Brown and Frisby were still unadjusted in 1710: "I enclose a petition of John Chidly and Peregrine Brown of London, merchants, who alledge that they are very unjustly dealt with by one James Frisby, who has defrauded them of a number of negroes to the value of £2700, I desire you will enquire into this matter, and give them all the assistance in your power towards the recovery of their just rights." dos; but not untill the 13th of Octob., by which your Lordships may perceive how tedious and uncertain that Conveyance is; And therefore have not the least apprehensions your Lordships Justice will impute any neglect to me; since in Obedience thereto I imediately made the best Inquiry I could, what numbers of Negros have been supplyd to this her Ma'tys Province by the Royall Affrican Company, or by the Seperate Traders who pay the tenn per ct., Since the 24th of June 1698. And by the List here inclosed, which is as exact as the speedy dispatch of this Answer would admitt, Your Lordships will find the Royall Affrican Company have not supplyd one Negro to this province during that tyme; Nor can I, on Enquiry of above twenty years last past heare of any ship belonging to the Company that has come hither; but Wee have been wholy supply'd by the seperate Traders, as your Lordships may perceive (tho by the Death and Removeall of severall Officers of the Customes here, I cannot learne the Owners or Importers, further than the Names of the severall shipps and Commanders; yet am satisfied they were exclusive of the Royall Affrican Company.

And these Negros have been sold for Bills of Excha. payable in London, generally men at £30 sterl., per head and Women at five and six and twenty pounds.

I have pursuant to your Lordships' directions discurst many of the principall planters here, by whom I am inform'd that before the year 1698, this province has been supplyd by some small Quantitys of Negro's from Barbados and other her Ma'tys Islands and Plantations, as Jamaica and New England Seaven, eight, nine or ten in a Sloope, and sometymes larger Quantitys, and sometymes, tho very seldom, whole ship Loads of Slaves have been brought here directly from Affrica by Interlopers, or such as have had Lycenses, or otherwise traded there. At present the Trade seems to run high, there having been between six and seaven hundred Negro's imported hither this yeare 1708. And the Planters owne themselves obliged to the seperate Traders for these supplys having never had any from the Company, and now the price of Negro's begins to abate, as Wee suppose by reason of the plentifull Importation by the seperate Traders, so that 'tis the Opinion of most here, should the seperate Traders be totally excluded, the Company would take no better care to supply them with slaves, than they have formerly done, which would not only be a great Detriment to the planters, but also to her Ma'tys Revenue of so valuable Customes on tob'o.

As to shipping belonging to this Country and imployed to the Coast of Affrica at present I cannot learne of any, nor above two or three persons concern'd therein wth the Merchts. in London.[2]

I humbly begg your Lordships pardon that the Account of what number of Negro's the province has been yearly supplyd with, and at what Rates has not been transmitted, which being interwoven with the Encouragemt. and Protection I am enjoyned to give the Royall African Company, made me mistake to be intended of those to be supplyd by them only. And to convince your Lordships of my future exact Complyance with Commands, I esteeme so sacred, have sent you a list of those imported this present year 1708.[3] And shall in all other Matters punctually observe and obey your Commands on all Occasions . . .

21. ACT FOR LAYING A DUTY ON SLAVES, 1716.[1]

An Act for Laying . . . four pounds Currant money per poll and Additional Duty on all Negroes for raising a Supply Towards Defraying the publick Charge of this province.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority Advice and Consent aforesaid that from and after the time as aforesaid for every Negroe Imported into this province Either by Land or Water the Importer or Importers of such negro or Negroes shall pay unto the Navall officer aforesaid the sume of four pounds Currant money per poll (over and above the twenty shillings Sterling per pole Imposed by a former act of Assembly of this province) for the uses aforesaid on penalty and forfeiture of Twenty pounds Currant money

[2] There is little reason to question Governor Seymour's implication that there was no direct trade to the coast of Africa, but an item from the Boston News Letter, June 24, 1706, rouses curiosity: "We are informed from Maryland, That the Assembly there has past an Act Prohibiting the exportation of all European Commodities out of that Province for three Years, excepting Goods consigned or belonging to Persons residing in Virginia or Pensilvania, and Merchandize Imported in order to be Shipt off for the Coast of Guinea." 22. Journal of the Board of Trade, 1726.[1]

May 4, 1726.

Mr. Hunt,[2] a trader to Maryland, being sworn, acquainted their Lordships, that of late years, there are annually imported into Maryland between 500 and 1000 negroes.[3] That the produce of a negroe is about 4 hogsheads of tobacco per annum, and that the duty of 4

[2] Letters of dissent to this act are recorded from Lords Baltimore and Guildford. A duty of 20 s. had been laid by act of 1715 (DuBois, p. 210). In the session of May, 1717, an act for laying an additional duty of 20 s. current money, over and above the 20 s. imposed by former acts, was passed, the proceeds to go to the support of education (Md. Arch., XXXIII. 109-111). The privilege of importing free of duty in Maryland vessels was so frequently abused that in 1720 a supplementary act was passed increasing the strictness of the oath to be taken by importers (Bacon, Laws, Oct. 27, 1720). In 1721 a law was enacted allowing inhabitants of the colony to bring in their slaves without payment of duty if they were not to be placed on sale (Md. Arch., XXXIV. 268-270). In 1728 "an act to supply some defects in the act 'for laying an Additional duty of 20 s. current money per poll on Irish servants and negroes'" was passed (id., XXXVI. 138, 158, 164, 175, 248). On Oct. 14, 1729, the Board of Trade called upon Colonel Hart to explain why Maryland had, in 1715, laid an imposition on negroes. His reply was that it had been done to check the raising of tobacco. On his withdrawal the board agreed to discuss with Lord Baltimore this duty and the favoritism shown to Maryland vessels by the terms of the act imposing it (B. T. Jour., 1728/9-1734, pp. 64-67). On Jan. 18, 1732, the board expressed the opinion that this act was unreasonable, but since it was to expire on Mar. 28, 1732, no action was taken. Md. Arch., XXXIV. 269; "Report of the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, Jan. 23, 1733/4", Add. MSS. 33028, p. 255.

[22] [1] B. T. Jour., 1722/3-1728, p. 254. In the absence of official reports occasional items concerning importation assure us of its continuance. On Mar. 15, 1720, word reached Philadelphia that the Sarah of London, bound for Maryland, had been captured by pirates in the Gambia River (Boston News Letter, Apr. 4, 1720). On Apr. 6 of that year the agents of the Royal African Company at Cape Coast Castle wrote: "Capt. Lambert joyned with Mr. Wm. Younge on a Trading Voyage to Windward. . . . Will consign the Negros to Mr. James Bowles at Puttuxent River in Maryland." Three months later the agents reported: "Shipd on board 260 Slaves vizt. 124 Men 112 Women and 26 boys and 8 girls. Consign'd to Mr. Ja. Bowles at Puttuxent River in Maryland" (T 70: 7, pp. 4, 7). On Aug. 2 the same agents wrote that the Elizabeth, Captain Bull, was to be sent from Cape Coast Castle to Maryland with slaves, but this plan was apparently not carried through because of the captain's failure to comply with the agreement (ibid., pp. 9, 21). On Feb. 4, 1721, the Gambia agents of the company loaded, or at least planned to load, the Martha, Capt. John Levett, with 400 negroes for Maryland (T 70: 123, p. 17). In September, 1722, it was "Ord'd That Mr. Hawkins proposals for 260 Negroes to be delivered at Mary Land, be referred to the Consideration of the Com'ee of Trade". T 70: 91, p. 165.

[2] William Hunt, a London merchant, had extensive dealings with Charles Carroll (Md. Hist. Mag., XIX. 179-192, passim). He was probably a brother of the Capt. Henry Hunt who carried Job ben Solomon to Maryland (see this work, II. 421). The Maryland Gazette, June 3, 1729, published a curious note relating to Capt. Henry Hunt: "I Do hereby certify and affirm, That I saw Capt. Henry Hunt in Barbadoes, where he arrived from Guinea the 6th of this Instant May, with a large Cargo of fine Slaves. That he acquainted me that he was desirous to come to Maryland, but that he had positive Orders to go to Jamaica, and that he was to sail for that Island the 9th of this Instant, being the next Day after my Departure from Barbadoes. Witness my Hand this 31st Day of May 1729. John West."

[3] If the figures which we have possess any significance whatever, the negro population was increasing rapidly during the years after 1710. One estimate for 1719 suggests that there were 25,000 in the colony (N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 605). Maryland had at one time hoped for 1000 pounds of tobacco per slave. E. D. Neill, Terra Mariae (1867), p. 201.

hogsheads is about £40 or £50. That the Province would take off more negroes, if they could get them, and that they would increase their trade. That Gambia, the Northern coast, and Angola, are the chief parts of Africa from whence Maryland is supplied. That he believes, if the trade was confined to a Company, negroes would be dearer, and the Province worse supplied. That the price of negroes has formerly been £30 or £40, but are now sold at £18, £20, and £25.

23. Notices of Sales, 1729.[1]

May 20, 1729.

Notice is hereby given that there's a Ship arrived in South-River, with about two Hundred choice Slaves, which will be expos'd to Sale on Thursday, the 22d of this Instant, by Daniel Dulaney, Richard Snowden, and Peter Hume.

June 24, 1729.

This is to give Notice, that the remaining Part of the Slaves, lately arrived in South-River, continue to be sold.

24. Act for laying a Duty on Slaves, 1735.[1]

A Supplementary Act, to the Act intituled, An Act laying an Imposition on Negroes.

Forasmuch as it appears to this General Assembly, to be a Hardship upon the Importers of Servants and Slaves into this Province, to pay Duty for such as shall happen to die, or be exported again before Sale: Be it Enacted, by the Right Honourable the Lord Proprietary by and with the Advice and Consent of His Lordship's Governour, and the Upper and Lower Houses of Assembly, and the Authority of the same, That no Person, or Persons whatsoever, hereafter, importing any Servants or Slaves, shall be chargeable with or liable to pay any Duty for any Servant or Slave that shall happen to die, or be exported out of this Province, before Sale of the said Servant or Slave.[2]

On July 25, 1754, an additional 10*s.* duty was added, and on Mar. 22, 1756, a 20 s. duty. In 1763 an additional duty of £2 current money was laid; in 1771, £5 current money. DuBois, Slave Trade, pp. 218, 219, 221.

[2] It is to be remembered that negroes imported for personal use were also exempt from duty: May 24, 1739, "The Petition of John Dabran, Praying an Allowance for the duties of Negroes paid, he having moved himself and family, into this Province with Intent to Settle, and therefore Prays an Exemption from the duty Imposed on Negroes on giving Security not to sell or Dispose of the said Negroes. Read and referred to the Committee of Accounts to Examine the facts." Md. Arch., XL. 347.

Provided always, That such Death, or Exportation, shall happen within Three Months after the Importation of such Servant or Slave; and that the said Person or Persons, who shall desire the Benefit of this Act, shall declare on his, her, or their corporal Oaths, to be administred by the Naval Officer, on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, That such Servant or Servants, Negroe or Negroes, exported or dead, within the said Time of Three Months, is or are Part of the Servants or Negroes imported or made Entry of: any Law, Usage, or Custom to the contrary, in any wise, notwithstanding.

And whereas divers Frauds have been committed by Sundry Persons, not Inhabitants of this Province, importing Negroes from Pennsylvania, Virginia, and other Provinces, who make sale of the said Negroes without Payment of the Duties arising on such Negroes: For Prevention whereof for the Future,

Be it Enacted, by the Authority, Advice and Consent aforesaid, That all and every Person or Persons, in whose Custody any Negroe or Negroes so imported into this Province shall be found, shall be deemed to be the Importer or Importers, and liable to pay the Duties due by Law, to the Naval Officer of the District where the said Person or Persons reside, under the Penalties by former Acts of Assembly in such cases inflicted upon the Importer or Importers of any Negroe or Negroes, concealed, kept back, or unaccounted for, by him, her or them: To be recovered in the Manner, and to the Uses, directed by the aforesaid Acts of Assembly . . .

This Act to continue in Force, for and during the Term of Three Years, and to the End of the next Session of Assembly which shall happen after the expirations of Three Years.

25. Proceedings of the Assembly, 1736.[1]

Wednesday, May the 5th, 1736.

The Question was put that 2/6 per hhd the 20 s. Sterling Duty ariseing on Negroes Imported . . . belonging to the Publick Schools be offered by an Address to the Lord Proprietary as an Equivalent for the Quit Rent and Alienation fines Resolved in the Negative. . . .

The Question was put that a Duty of 5 per Cent be raised on the Purchasers of Negroes as part of the ways and means towards raiseing an Equivalent.

26. Philip Lee to Governor Samuel Ogle, 1741.[1]

[June 27, 1741.]

To his Excellency Samuel Ogle Esqr., Governor of Maryland. The humble Remonstrance of Philip Lee Naval Officer of North Patowmeck District

This Remonstrant begs Leave to inform your Excellency, that he with some Others in this Province having been imployed for some years past by some Merchants in Bristol to sell and dispose of what Negroes they should consign to this Remons't and his Partners, and your Remonstrant being Naval Officer of the Port and District af'd presumed he might reasonably expect any Advantage which might accrue to a Naval Officer by the Entry of such ships and Negroes: And for that purpose this Remonstrant took Care to lodge from time to time with the Collector of North Patowmeck as with Mr. Sewall at the Mouth of Patuxent Directions or Orders to the Captains of Such Ships where to repair in order to enter their Vessels and Cargoes.

That agreeable to this Practice a Letter was left with Mr. Sewall directing Captn. Lovey (who was expected in a Ship called the George with Slaves) to enter with the Collector and this Remonstrants Deputy at North Patowmeck; That Captn. Lovey upon his Arrival last from Africa with a Cargo of Slaves consigned to this Remonstrant and Partners came to an Anchor with his ship off Cedar Point, and went on Shoar to Mr. Sewalls house, where he found the Directions af'd and agreeable thereto rode to the Collector of North [26] [1] Md. Arch., XXVIII. 242-245. "At a Council held in the Council Chamber on Thursday 11th of June in the twenty seventh year of his Lordships Dominion Annoq. Domini 1741." Samuel Ogle was governor in 1732, 1735-1742, and 1747-1752.

Patowmeck, with whom and this Remonstrants Deputy or Clerk Captain Lovey legally entered his Ship and whole Number of Slaves and gave an Import Bond for the Duties

That Lovey upon his Return carryed his Ship without Drum Point but in the Mouth of Patuxent and then went on Shoar to the Collector there, to whom he shewed his Papers, which certifyed his Entry with the Collect'r and Naval Officer of Patowmeck, notwithstanding which the Collector of Patuxent insisted that Captn. Lovey should reenter his Ship and Cargo with him, and that the Ship being within his District the Entry at Patowmeck was void, and then asked for the Register of the said Ship, which Captain Lovey delivered to him, but the Collector of Patuxent refused to redeliver it; A matter unpresidented, and the Detainer of which without the Masters Consent no officer can answer, and a Ship that went home last Year the Owners are hurt by the Registers being left behind.

From thence he went to the Naval Officer of Patuxent who told Lovey that as he had not been in Patowmeck or broke Bulk, he ought to enter his Ship and Cargo with him, and used threatning Words as that he would be aboard his Ship etc., and therefore Lovey made a Reentry and sign'd an Import Bond with the said Naval Officer, who detained his Plantation Certificate; the just Right of your Remonstrant by the Act of Navigation 12th Charles 2d.

This being a short State of the Transaction with Regard to Loveys Entry this Remonstrant apprehends from the Conduct of the Officers at Patuxent, that they imagined the first Entry with the Officers at Patowmeck to be void and consequently any perquisites from such Entry or the payment thereof the Duties on the Negroes not to belong properly to him as Naval Officer, but he humbly hopes that the Naval Officer and Collector of Patux't will appear to be mistaken for the following Reasons.

1st Your Remonstrant conceives and is advised that the Authority of the Governors of Every Plantation by the Statute 15th Car 2d Cap 7-8 extends in what is there mentioned over Every Part of the Plantation Colony or Province, and therefore that he cannot by appointing a Naval Officer who is only his Deputy abridge the Power of such Officer in such manner as that a Captain shall not be said to have complyed with that Statute by Delivery of a true Inventory etc. to any person authorized to receive it which is a Naval Officer, altho' the Ship should even lye in another District or Port, for that the Statute does not confine the Exercise of the Authority to any Places less than the Land Island Plantation af'd etc. . . .

2dly As this Entry with the Officers of Patowmeck was strictly legal This Remonstrant conceives it is highly reasonable for him to insist on it since it is in the Case of a Ship consigned to him, since every Merchant may enter his Ship and Cargo where he pleases.

3dly That Lovey about 4 years ago entered in Patowmeck without carrying his Ship in the River, and this Entry was not disputed in Patuxent. Campbell made the like Entry twice and One of them was allowed, the other contested under the Pretext that he was within Patuxent River, and that the Remonstrants Deputy was not present (the latter of these Objections is now removed), notwithstanding which the Naval Officer of Patuxent conscious to himself that I was injured, allowed me half the Advantage of the Entry. . . . as Captain Lovey labours under a manifest Hardship by the Detainer of his Register and Certificate [2] and may be stopt here for Want thereof so I humbly hope Your Excellency will interpose your Authority and order the Delivery of the Certificate which this Remonstrant takes to be his indubitable Right by all the Laws of England and that he is accountable for this Entry and obliged to render a true Account thereof to Your Excellency, his Lordships Agent and the Country for all Fees and Duties arising on the Ship George; This being the Case would it not be the height of Injustice for Captn. Lovey to be obliged to pay double fees etc. which must be the Consequence if the Officers of Patuxent claims should be deemed legal, such treatment as this as it will be a great Discouragement to Trade, so it will not fail of being complained of by the Owners which may greatly injure the Interest of Your Remonstrant and Partners, who humbly hope your Excellency in your great Wisdom will seriously deliberate on this Affair, and do therein as to Your great Judgment shall seem meet and for which your Remonstrant will ever pray.

Please N B that the Owners have positively ordered the Masters to enter in my District as by Letter to me will appear.[3]

27. Case of the Mary, 1749.[1]

The Examination of Thomas Davison Master of the Ship "Mary" now at Anchor in Patuxent River

[2] In the margin: "N. B. the Reg'r since delivered by Rousby the Certif stopt by Mr. Plater."

[3] To this George Plater, the naval officer of Patuxent, submitted a long reply, the gist of which was that the fees for the entry of any vessel were the perquisites of that officer into whose district the vessel came to anchor. To defend his conduct in the case of the George he cited the provisions of the law, and argued that, since a naval officer's power was limited to his own district, Lee was the actual aggressor in the affair by exceeding his powers in certifying the entry of the George. Plater's answer was followed by a further communication from Lee, who, learning that the governor intended to submit the matter to the council, protested that it was a private controversy of which the council had no cognizance, and must be decided by the governor himself or by the courts. Md. Arch., XXVIII. 245-247.

[27] [1] Md. Arch., XXVIII. 453. On June 14, 1749, Governor Samuel Ogle laid before the council a letter from Governor Gooch of Virginia, which charged Captain Davison, who was in the employ of Mr. Philpot of London, with having on board his vessel, the Mary, six negroes kidnapped at the Isle of May, one of the Cape Verde Islands. Davison had been in Virginia, but on the threat of admiralty proceedings there he had sailed for Maryland. The council at once issued a warrant to the sheriff directing that Captain Davison be brought before it. Ibid., pp. 451-452.

This Examinant Saith that after his taking in a Loading of Salt at the Isle of May he went to the Island of St. Jago to water where he staid two days in taking in his water and on the second day a Certain Edward Lope a Black Man and his son made an Offer of Selling to him Six Negroes or Blacks which he understood to be Slaves Whereuppon this Examinant Agreed to buy them if the said Lope would bring them on Board and this Examinant should Like them, And in the Evening of the same day the said Lope brought three Negroes in this Examinants Long Boat on Board of his Ship, and this Examinants Doctor returned with the said Lope in his Boat and fetched the other three Negroes for which said Six Negroes this Examinant Paid the said Lope in his Cabin on board of the said Ship in Money and Goods according to the Value this Examinant and the said Lope agreed they were worth.

The Examination of Robert Lusk Mate of the Ship "Mary" whereof Captain Davison is Master and now in Patuxent River in the Province of Maryland taken before the Governor and Council of the said Province this 22d day of June 1749.[2]

This Examinant being first sworn on the holy Evangels of Almighty God deposeth and Saith That he in the said Ship arrived on the 4th of March at the Island of St. Jago, that on the 6th of the same Month about two hours after sunset he being in his Cabin heard some Strangers come on board the said Ship, that the Captain and the said Strangers were in the Cabin making a Bargain that he heard them talking about the Price of Goods, and that he also heard the Sound of Money upon the Table; This Examinant also saith that he saw on the next Morning Six Negroes on board the said Ship That the said Ship Sailed from St. Jago about five or six of the Clock in the morning, that she proved very leaky on her Voyage, and that the Six Negroes worked willingly at the Pump untill the Ship Came within One hundred Leagues of the Capes of Virginia, and that then they were not so forward to worke as before

The Examination of Charles Menzies Surgeon of the Ship "Mary" whereof Captain Davison is Master and now in Patuxent River in the Province of Maryland taken before the Governor and Council of the said Province this 22d Day of June 1749.[3]

[2] Md. Arch., XXVIII. 454. At the request of the captain, the chief mate, the second mate, the doctor, the carpenter, and those sailors who had sailed from England in the Mary were called before the council.

[3] Ibid., pp. 454-456.

This Examinant being first Sworn on the holy Evangels of Almighty God deposeth and Saith That he in the said Ship arrived from the Isle of May to the Island of St. Jago One of the Cape de Verd Islands on the 4th of March last in the Evening That on the 5th of the said Month this Examinant went with the said Captain on Shoar of the said Island of St. Jago and was entertained by one whom they called Captain More being the Commanding Officer of that Port, and whilst they were there Captain Davison seeing two young Negro boy Slaves waiting or serving wine asked Captain More if he would sell either one or both of the boys to which Captain More by his Interpreter answered that he would not sell any to the English, That after Captain Davison went from the said Captain Mores the same day the said Interpreter took Captain Davison aside and had some discourse with him Part of which this Examinant heard to be that the said Interpreter had some Negroes which this Examinant understood to be three or more but that they were at his Mothers and he would send for them That this Examinant with the said Davison went on board and Returned the next day which was the Sixth day of March and were again entertained by the said Captain More and the said Davison demanded his money from Captain More for Goods Davison had sold to him the Day before, that after parting with the said Captain More the said Davison having some Goods on Shoar to Purchase fresh Provisions he by means of the said Interpreter bought some, and then Davison went again to Captain More for his money and Returning to the Shoar where this Examinant with the Carpenter were on the Beach, the said Davison asked the said Interpreter if the said Negroes were come to which the said Interpreter answered they would Come soon, and then it was after sunsett, thereupon Captain Davison was going on board and this Examinant was desirous of going with him but Captain Davison Requested this Examinant to stay untill the Interpreter should bring three Slaves thereupon this Examinant staid and the Captain went on board and sent his Boat back, on the Return of which Boat the Examinant went on board of her in order to go on board of the Ship and had Actually put off with the Boat from the Shoar (being about two hours after sunsett) but being at some small distance from the Shoar the said Interpreter haled the Boat upon which the Boat Returned to the Shoar and the Interpreter brought the three Negroes who together with the said Interpreter went with this Examinant on Board, That this Examinant had heard at the Isle of May and which this Examinant verily believes Captain Davison also knew for this Examinant frequently mentioned it before to Captain Davison that there was some Law or Canon of the Church as well at the Isle of May as St. Jago against selling any Slave to hereticks and therefore when the said three Negroes were brought as aforesaid on board this Examinant took notice to Captain Davison of such a Law or Canon, That Captain Davison having agreed with the said Interpreter for the said Negroes in Money and Goods the said Interpreter took the Money and Left the Goods on board untill he should Return with the other three Negroes and thereupon this Examinant by the Express Orders and directions of Captain Davison and against the Inclination of this Examinant (he being apprehensive of the said Law or Canon) returned in the Boat with the said Interpreter for the other three Negroes which the said Interpreter with his Son and this Examinant brought on Board about four hours after Sun sett and when they were come on Board this Examinant had some doubts whether the said Six Negroes were the Property of the said Interpreter who by repeated Solemn asserverations assured Captain Davison they did belong to him, after which Capt. Davison Proceeded to Value each Negro and when the Price was fixed this Examinant saw the Money paid and Goods delivered by Captain Davison to the said Interpreter for the Purchase. And this Examinant further Saith that Observing One of the said Negroes was better Cloathed than the Others the Interpreter said He could sound a Trumpet Play on the Fiddle and was a Weaver And this Examinant further saith that the said Ship Sailed early next Morning from the said Island. This Examinant further saith that the sd Interpreter during the whole time called the said Negroes his slaves.

At a Council held in the Council Chamber on Wednesday the fifth Day of July in the 35th year of his Lord'ps Dominion Annoq Domini 1749.[5] . . .

The Sheriff of St. Marys County attending with the Freeman and Negroes according to the direction of his Warrant they were called in and none of them Speaking English they were by the best Interpreter that could be got here Examined, and they all declared that they were brought by Captain Davison from the Island of St. Jago into this Country against their Will

Upon the whole It seemed to this Board that Captain Davison by a clandestine Contract and Assistance of some Inhabitant of the Island of St. Jago had Procured the said Freeman and Negroes to be brought on board his Ship and that they themselves might have been Prevailed upon by some Specious Promises to Leave the Island.

[4] Evidence was also offered by John Smalwood, carpenter on the Mary, William Ahier, master of the Two Brothers, which had come from Santiago, William Cook, apprentice to Captain Davison, and Robert Watson, cook on the Mary. Md. Arch., XXVIII. 456-458.

[5] Ibid., pp. 459-460.

It is therefore Ordered by this Board that the said Captain Davison enter into Bond with two sufficient Sureties in the Sum of two hundred Pounds Sterling Conditioned as follows.

The Condition of the Above Obligation is such That if the Six Negroes or Blacks brought by the said Thomas Davison from the Island of St. Jago into this Province shall be Safely Transported and Landed at the said Island at the Expence Costs and Charges of the said Thomas Davison, and in Case any of the said Negroes or Blacks shall happen to die or not be delivered on the said Island of St. Jago that the said Thomas Davison his Executors or Administrators shall pay to the Owner or Owners the full worth of such Negroes or Blacks as shall die or not be delivered as aforesaid And if the said Thomas Davison his Executors or Administrators shall make Satisfaction to the Owner or Owners in the said Island of the said Negroes or Blacks or any of them for all such damages as may be claimed by the said Owner or Owners by Reason or means of the said Negroes or Blacks being brought from the said Island as aforesaid then this Obligation to be Void Otherwise to Remain in full force and Virtue in Law.[6]

[Governor Samuel Ogle to the Governor at Santiago.][7]

Sir, As soon as I was Informed of the Suspicion That Captain Thomas Davison Master of the Ship Mary had in an unlawful manner brought away from your Island five Slaves and a freeman I was desirous of doing what Justice I could And Captain Davison with his Mate, Surgeon, Carpenter, Apprentice and Cook were Summoned to Appear before me who upon their Examinations declared what you will see by the Inclosed Papers. And I think he has been encouraged and Assisted by some of the Inhabitants of your Island to do what is now Complained of against him however that you may be satisfyed the English are unwilling to Countenance any unjust Act and Ready to redress every injury as far as they can, Especially towards the Portugal Nation with whom our King is in so good Friendship: I tooke Possession of the Freeman and five Slaves and now send them to you by way of the Madera Wishing they may Arrive in Safety to you and shall be glad to hear that you have received them. . . .

The Petition of Thomas Davison Mariner and Master of the Ship "Mary" now Riding at Anchor in the River Patuxent.[8]

Humbly Sheweth, That your Petitioner in Pursuance of your Excellency and Councils decree hath Shipt off to the Island of Madera those Six Negroes (which he bought at St Jago) in Mr. Samuel Galloways Vessel at the Expence of thirty Guineas, and Nine Pounds Current Money of this Province, and has given Security to him for the making good any damages he may Sustain on Account of his said Vessels being detained for their delivery. And further has been obliged to give Bond to Messrs. Skinner and Ireland to give them Counter Security for that Indemnification to Mr. Galloway, besides Lodging in their Possession all the Profits Accruing on this Voyage; which your Petitioner will greatly stand in need of, for the support of his family and Paying Tradesmen in London when he gets there.

Your Excellency is also well acquainted with the Bond first given with you of two hundred Pounds Sterling for the sending those Negroes to the aforesaid Island of Madera and as it is more than Probable that by this time (the dangers of the Seas Excepted) they have reached that Place, Your Petitioner humbly begs Leave to hope that your Excellency will in this Particular Case Commiserate his hard fate thro' the whole Course of this unhappy affair, and that his Ship being in a Little time to sail, Your Excellency will with your wonted and Established Character and Clemency Admit him to take in the Last mentioned Bond of two hundred Pounds Sterling whereby he may be Enabled to depart this Province in better Circumstances than he at Present Labours under.

Your Excellencys favour in this will in a Particular manner Lay him under a greater Regard to your Excellencys favour and Prompt him to Pray for your welfare and Success, as he will be in duty Bound etca.[9]

29. CASE OF THE EDWARD, 1760.[1]

J. Ross to James Weems.

ANNAPOLIS, 22d September 1760.

Sir, It having been this Day represented to the Governor and Council, that a Negroe called Capt. Gray and three or four more of the Negroes who were lately imported into Patuxent River in the Brigantine Edward of which one John Cousins is Master have declared that they are not Slaves but Freemen, that the Negroe called Capt. Gray in particular is the son of a person of some Consequence and Power on the African Coast, and that the said Cousins treacherously stole and brought them away. I am Ordered by his Excellency and their Honours to communicate to you the Information that hath been given them and moreover to Desire that on the Receipt hereof you will send for, and examine the Surgeon Mates and Boatswain of the said Vessell and Endeavour to discover whether Capt. Cousins hath committed the Crime whereof he is accused, and if you shall either by the Evidence of those Persons or any others be inclined to think that the Master is guilty, you will be pleased to have him apprehended immediately and delivered into the Custody of the Sheriff of Calvert County, and to give that Sheriff Orders to deliver him over to the Sheriff of this County, so that he may be brought without Delay before his Excellency and the Council to be dealt with as to them shall seem meet. If you see Cause for having him apprehended you will be pleased to send hither all the Persons that shall be able to give Evidence against him, and whether you Cause him to be

The Deposition of Eneas Loughrig Aged about twenty-one years who being duely sworn on the holy Evangels of Almighty God Deposeth and saith that he is a Saylor on board of the Brigantine Edward John Cousins Commander and that he sailed from Liverpool along with the said Capt. Cousins before the Mast on a Voyage to the Coast of Guinea to purchase Slaves, that during their Trade on that Coast Capt. Cousins made a Purchase of several Slaves and that he this Deponent believes and never heard to the Contrary but that all the negroes brought in by Captain Cousins were Slaves; unless a negroe who calls himself Capt. Gray should be Free whose particular Circumstances are as follows, he Gray was a Servant to a Freeman upon the Coast of Guinea and that he used to be employed by his Master to go in a Cannoo to carry Slaves on Board of Trading Vessels and as a Plavvrer (Palaverer) that he carried some on board of the Brigantine Edward whilst he was in that Vessell he stole a Scarlet Jacket from Capt. Cousins who never permitted him (Gray) to go on Shore afterwards, but offered to return him if he could get another Slave for him which was refused by those to whom the Offer was made, they said he was a scandal to his Country and they

CHESTER TOWN,[2] Decb. 15th, 1760.

Dear Sir. . . . I found a great Deal of Trouble and Diligence required to get anything and severel Things I did not get, there was not one peice of Chiloes or Nickanees or blue Basts in the whole Town nor but 2 ps. of Tapsails,[3] so I was obliged to supply the Defects by Manchester Goods in Immitation as well as I coud. I got enough Stripes like Tapseils coud get but 2 ps. of tapsails in Town and 2 ps. I laid by at Mr. Dicks. I was put to great Difficulty ab't Gunns could not find any of the Trading Gunns but 21 in Town, them I got for 15/ Cash each. I was obliged to take Some light Arms of Willing and Morris they are nett and Handy, not made [——shett?] fashion but yet have all for Bayonetts to them, P'haps they will Sell the Better to the Negroes if not the Captn. must sell them Seperate as Daggors to hang by their Sides. I got also 58 good Nett Cuttlesses Buck Handles and brass mounted at 6/ Currency. The whole goods I got amounts to upwards of £500 [800?] Currency and Shall add a few More Articles. I got them all on board the Shallop. She came away a Friday night and is down. The Goods will be here in a Day or two and we shall send our Schooner down with every Thing hope She'll get away by the last of the week. I did not get any Slops, they were excessive Dear and I did not well know what to get. we shall send home good Dowless shirts which must serve the seamen, and they must provide enough of other Cloaths for the voyage before they go. Getting so few Gunns in Philada. I wrote to Mr. Freman [?] to try to pick me up 100 or less at York of the Cheap sort and send with the Rum. I wrote him also as to Dollars not one of them to be got in Philada.

I have not got Mr. Tilghmans Answer whether Coll. Loyd[4] has any or not but shall send down before our Schooner comes away. I have got powder enough. I spoke to Mr. Dick to save 2 bbs. of his it was F [?] and dear but he had no more and I was fearful it woud be gone and least it shoud be as dear above I desired him to resume it. You can tell him we will take it unless he woud be as willing to keep it. . . .[5]

[P. S.] I got some fig'd Dimathy and some Corded—have taken also 8 ps. of Irish printed Cottens red at 3/2 p yd. they are very good Goods, near as Cheap as Tapsails and much better Goods I think they'l do, and instead of blue bafts I have got a fine blue Linnen with a Nett white Print stampt wth a Copper Plate in Imitation of Dresden Lace, I took 8 ps of that it comes at 4/ p yd. is as cheap as blue bafts and much neeter. I have got a good stock of Checks and Stripes and [illegible] checks and some Cotten Romall Handkerchefs and enough of Bandanoes, tho chiefly English and Irish, They'l do.[6]

August 15th, 1761.

Dear Sir, Mr. Davis comes Express to us immediately on Captn. Simm's Arrival, in hopes to save Insurance. Had I been in Town the Expence of this Express woud have been saved. I understand his Cargo in is 4 Hhds Rum 14 Negroes[2] and some Cash. Mr. Davis does not know what but believes £150 or thereabouts if so and if Negroes woud bring £40 [illegible] round, we shoud make our old [illegible]. I have got a proper voucher to draw back our £5 p ct. premium for sailing with Convoy, Our affairs are so circumstanced that I cannot possible come down to you must leave it to you to dispose of the Negroes and the Rum hope the Rum will bring 7/6 p if good Spirit. woud not these Negroes suit Caleb Dorsey and Mr.

[4] It is impossible to be certain which of the many members of the Tilghman family is here referred to. It may have been Edward, whose second wife was related to the Galloways (Md. Hist. Mag., I. 283-284), or Matthew, whose wife was Anna Lloyd, daughter of James Lloyd. Ibid., p. 370.

Harrisson. They both want much and P'haps might be worth while to send to them Express, if you want any of them y'self can keep them, you'l see what Trades and what value they are. . . . Captn. Neilson got away last Thursday Evening. We sold 14 of the Negroes yesterday very well considering the Cond'n they were in. The wenches and 1 man at 60 each, 1 man £68, 1 Boy £60, Girls at £56, 2 sickly Girls cheap, the Maits Boy for £70, the small poor Boy died coming up. we have only The 2d Maits Fellow and 2 Girls hope they go today. But the worst of it twas chiefly on some Credit, Am glad to get them off so. If those you have don't ruble off before next week send them to Q As [Queen Anne's][3] Court and I will sell them, then they'l not be in the way of Simms's which you may set to work till you can sell them. they lost one it seems by the smallpox coming in. this shoud be kept secret as it may make people fearful, twas very fortunate they had no more to have it. The Insurance Captn. Simms you know pays none of. . . .

Dear Sir . . . You may well sell so few Negroes as the Sloop has without me, you can judge as well as I of the Quality and Value, and if Tradesmen I hope will sell well. . . . There is a young negro Fellow a seaman, or one however that has been used to the water that was afraid of getting a bad Master and last Night stole on board our Schooner and hid himself, All our people declare they did not know he was on board till this Morning when they were almost at home. Davis and the people told him coming over we were good Masters and the poor Fellow beggs us to buy him so much we have concluded to keep him and to pay what you shall think him worth or what such another sells for. . . .

she met with in the Loss of so great a part of her Slaves. we had but 105 left alive to sell, 11 of them so bad we were glad to get £11 Ster. p Head for them, 6 of the 11 since dead and many of the others in very bad Condition. In the Condition we reced. the Cargo we really made a Monstrous Sale as Captn. Neilson will inform you, and much beyond his Expectation as well as our own; but under the Circumstances they were, we thought it best to get them off as quick as possible, and we refused no offers of a safe Man even upon 9 and 12 Months Credt. being so circumstanced puts it out of our Power to make you above 2/3ds Remittance by the Ship. This is as much as is usually made, but coud we have got pay'd for the whole we shoud by no means have retained the Use of a farthing but remitted all, and we shall ever make it a point in this Bussiness to remit all we possibly can recover. Tho' it allway's helps a sale even of the best Slaves to give Cred't in some Instances and we can by such people get off the worst of the Slaves and enhance the price or keep it up more than Interest of Money considerably. This comes by Way of London and you have here with Copy of our Sales and tho' we assure you we have not yet reced. 2/3ds of the Nett proceeds, and the other third besides our Commissions is yet outstanding, we not only remit you the full 2/3ds but also upwards of £400 Sterling more properly of our own Money, as a fund for protested Bills if there shoud be any, that you may nevertheless be in Cash for full 2/3ds. . . .

Captn. Neilson will Sail in 4 or 5 Days at farthest with a full Load of Tobacco. . . .

Our Duty is higher at present by a Tax of 30/ p head laid on Acct of the war than it will be after peace. You see by the Sales how a Cargo of fine Healthy Negroes may be sold.* and we think we can venture to say they coud fall into no Hands here that coud make more of them than we can, and Shall be glad to serve you or your Friends in that waye.

you came from Virginia. . . . If I had then known that Mr. Bordley was so very uneasy abt it as I find he is since I woud have waited on him, and spoke to him abt it. We just before that had some Gold that we chiefly parted with that woud have help'd pay. Since I came home I find that Mr. Bordley was up here whilst I was at Philadelphia and expressed great uneasiness at my not being at Home. Said you and I owed him a large sum upwards of £200 Mary'd Money for the Dutys on the Negroes and he had been obliged to advance his own Money for us that he expected you woud have paid, that yo' had turned him over to me and now I was gone from Home he coud not see me and shoud be kept out of it by us both but he hoped yo' woud not refuse to allow him Interest when we did pay him. I think we ought to take of [up?] his Complaints and make payment at all Events. . . . I will take over all our Negro Papers and we will settle fully, pray if yo' can in the Mean time get Mr. Bordley p'd off by Borrowing or anything. . . .

I was therefore very sorry to find you had engaged in another Vessel to put it in the power of another be him who he woud, to serve you as Craigg has you cant think better of him than you did of the other whatever is the Meaning of it there are more disasters in those Voyages than any others whatever." Ibid.

Maryland Annapolis Novemr. 30th, 1762.

Sir, We ware part owners of a Vessel to the River Gambia in the Slave Trade the last Summer in which Capt. [Craig] Shipt Twenty Slaves on Freight to the Address of our Samuel Galloway on your Acct. and risque expecting the Vessell would return to Maryland but unfortunant for you as well as ourselves she fell into Antego, where the Cargo as well as your Slaves Sold considerably lower than they would have done here—besides our loosing the Commission two of your 20 died on the passage and for the other 18 you have Mesrs. Livingston and Furlongs Sales and there bills for £261.18.6 1/2 paiable at 9 Months sight on Samuel Turner Esq. in London for the full proceeds. We think we can very Justly say we should have made a much more agreeable return had she Arrived here. we have had heretofore the pleasure of rendering much more profitable Accts. to the Gentlemen we have done Business for in that way, our Terms for Sales and remitance are 8 p Ct. on Gross Sales to remit one half by the Ship the other half in 12 months. this is the Greatest Indulgance Stipulated and we have hitherto done much better. We take Occation to tell you, that we have agreed to execute all Business of this kind Jointly that may come either Jointly or Sepertly to us and tender you and your Friends our best Services in that way.

Our additional Duty laid here on acct. of the War will Expire next June when we shall have but 20/ Ster. and 20/ Curency Duty and we believe you will find this Market as good or better on Trial than any other.[2]

Chester Town July 10th, 1763.

Dear Sir, . . . Devonshire and Reeve[2] writes us requesting us to take a Power of Attorney to get our Money out of a Certain Gent'ans Hands for them. They say they know it is in our Power to serve them and we may depend they'l procure us the Consignment of our African Ship solely on their Interest, we shall endeavour to serve them. . . .

Chester Town May 6th, 1764.

Dear Sir, I have been looking over our Guinee Accts since I came home, and They really are almost got out of my Hand. I wish we coud get them settled whilst we can understand them. Pray bring with you Your Account Books of the Guinae Affairs, I will put the other Papers in such a posture that we shall be able to settle P'haps, if not whilst you are up, if I have the Books I can st[?] them so that we may do it the first Time I come down. shoud be glad if you coud get the Exact sum Carlisle and Dalton paid, and that you'd look over our Acct. and we coud finish the whole together. . . .

We shall want Mr. Graves's Acct. of protested Bills.

West Town Augst. 27th 1764.

Dear Sir, I find every thing as Dull here as possible and no prospect of selling the Slaves, nor is there the Least prospect of Selling any at Queens Town. Brother Will has sold but 5 since I went away so that thers 32 left, for these Mr. Richie offerd £22 10 Sh round and take them all in the vessel which he has sent round to Philadelphia, but as by our selling them here the Duty cannot be drawn back Mr. Hill woud not take it but I tell him that if he takes them up himself by Duck Creek he can either sell them to Richie or take the same Chance as Richie had, which he was candid enough to tell us was that there was Comn. and agent come from the Havannah to buy, that he coud Land them in the Jerseys and get £25 Stg. round and 50/ p Head woud pay him for his risque and Expence, so Mr. Hill thinks if he does not break if [up?] present assortment he can get the price going of those people himself and I advise him to take that rout and gladly give up the Comsn. for the part he takes and on carrying them out of the province he is intitled to the Draw back of the Duty. This I think better for us than puzzling at Queens Town and selling none and then sending to Sam Henson as I before proposed, for the Gentln thought £22 10 Stl. round too much without the Duty off and then if his Tobo shoud prove bad and Mr. Hill shoud suffer by it or we coud not sell it again we might loose Reputation and if we advised trying further and he shoud beat us down lower than Mr. Hills Expectations he might think we had our Comn. more at heart than his Interest so pray get a Permit from the Collector and Naval Officer to take 32 that is 11 men, 5 women 8 Boys and 8 Girls of the Cargo to the Counties of New Castle Kent and Sussex or Delaware,[2] and we may get a new Permit if necessary to go from there to the Jerseys and we shall be clear of any further Trouble. . . .

43. Thomas Ringgold to Samuel Galloway, 1766.[1]

Chester Town May 4th, 1766.

Dear Sir, I wrote you a few Linès in a great Hurry about the Sloop with the Negroes, Yesterday by Mr. Steuart and sent You the Owners Letter to us and to the Captn. Inclosed is Copy of the Letter we wrote the Gentn. last October since which we have not heard from them.

We suppose they will have no Duties to pay if they carry the Negroes to Rhode Island and we fear they woud not sell here for ready Bills but at a very low rate such as woud not give Content, we are shure they woud not sell at all on this Shoare. You know best what they will do on your Side. If you think theres any prospect of Selling so as to give the Gentn. Content and are amind to try it, write us a Line and we will step over, otherwise youl advise the Captn and we will join in a Letter to the Owner's letting them know as we found they woud not sell here we had persued their Orders in sending them to Rhode Island. The Captn. will see by the Copy of our Letter to his Owners and by this to you that you are joined with us.

Chester Town July 4th, 1766.

Dear Sir, I received yours of the 25th but Yesterday. I really think if you had taken £23 round of Mr. Barnes it would have been more than the Slaves were worth Yet as we have such odd people to deal with I think it better they shoud have them themselves; as they woud not let us know what woud satisfy them, saying they heard Slaves woud bring [torn] £40 to £45 Sterling here [illegible] not all, they shoud have [torn] what they woud bring with them and then they woud have given us some proper Foundation to judge what was best for their Interest.[2] . . .

45. News Items relating to Slave Trade, 1766.

Annapolis in Maryland, Sept. 11 [1766].[1]

Some very remarkable Causes, about 20, have been determined this Week, at our Assize Court. The Actions were brought by some Seamen, against the Master of a Guiney Ship, for Ill usage, and Wages; and the Sailors got much the Weather gage of their Captain, and lay so far to windward of him, that they run him down, by Recovering very considerable Damages, their Wages, and Costs of Suit, which amount to many Guineas, the Actions being first brought in the County Court, from thence remov'd to the Provincial, and from thence to the Assizes. (This was a Guinea Voyage indeed.)

Aug. 25, 1770.[2]

Ran away from the Subscriber, living in Charles County, near Pamunky Warehouse, on Tuesday the 14th Instant, a Negro Man, named George, just imported in the Snow Providence, Capt. Davis from Africa: He is about 5 Feet 8 Inches high, has a Scar on the right Side of his Head, the Inside of his Hands and the Soles of his Feet are remarkably speckled: Had on, when he went away an old blue great Coat, a brown Roll Shirt and Trousers.

Whoever takes up, and secures the said Negro, so that I may get him again, shall have a Reward of Thirty Shillings Currency, including what the Law allows, and reasonable Charges if brought home, paid by Alexander M'Donald.

Just arrived In the Mary, Captain Samuel Haycroft, from Africa, A Small Parcel of about One Hundred choice Slaves, consisting of Men, Women, Boys, and Girls, which will be sold, on Monday next, the Tenth Instant, at Selby's Landing, on Patuxent River, for Bills of Exchange or Current Money, by the Subscribers. years later he wrote: "Saturday [1768 or 1769] Mr. Symmes just lets me know he has entered into a Scheme for the Coast of Guinea etc. and has left Room for you. I think the Matter may be conducted to great advantage and what yo. incline to do in it we will be concerned with yo. if yo. choose it." The last reference to the trade found in this correspondence is an undated note which precedes a letter of 1770: "Queens Town Wednesday afternoon. I have waited here for the Negroes all day with much Impatience. this was the Day for Sale and most people hope they [may] yet be here tonight."

46. Perkins and Burling to William Van Wyck, 1789.[1]

Cape [François], Feb. 20, 1789.

If it should be in your power to purchase a few serviceable stout negroes, some Tradesmen (as Carpenters, Blacksmiths and a Cooper) and others acquainted with the Culture of Tobacco, we sh'd be glad you would do it on our acct. and ship them here, one or two at a time, as opportunity offers. We suppose common working Negroes may be had from 40 to 45£ your money, and Tradesmen from 50 to 70£. We wish 15 or 20 of this description as we intend sending them to the Natchez.

47. Perkins and Burling to John Hollins, 1789.[1]

Cape François, May 27, 1789.

The ports of St. Domingo, Carracas and Havanna are opened for the reception of Negroes in foreign bottoms, for the space of two years, free of duty. . . . The Cargoes must consist of one Third Women, but we suppose you will have it published in America.

There is a fine field opened for Guinea Speculations. Our general has opened the Ports of Aux Cayes, Jaemel and Jeremi, for the Introduction of Negroes by foreigners, to commence the first of August next and continue five years. . . .

48. Perkins and Burling to Stewart and Plunkett, 1791.[1]

Two Guinea-Men have arrived here, and as we observe your main object is to dispose of this Vessell or find some advantage from her returns from the Havanna, we have succeeded in the purchase of 16 prime male negroes at 1650. . . . We have drawn upon you in favour of M. Hautval for the amt. of the 16 slaves.

[46] [1] L. V. Briggs, History and Genealogy of the Cabot Family, II. 475-476. William van Wyck was a Baltimore merchant. On Jan. 24, 1788, Perkins and Burling had offered their services in the Guinea trade to Messrs. Samuel and John Smith of Baltimore. On Oct. 7, 1788, they wrote to this firm concerning the cost of landing a cargo of young slaves in Santo Domingo. Such negroes were at that time selling in the island for 25 joes (ibid., pp. 474-475). The editor has not examined the Perkins and Burling letters.

[47] [1] Briggs, The Cabot Family, II. 476. Hollins was a Baltimore merchant. It was probably to this house that Perkins and Burling wrote in 1792: "An excellent voyage may be made by taking Negroes from hence, and sugar and molasses in return (from Havanna). New choice Negroes will pay a freight of 50 or 60 dolls. pr. head." Ibid., p. 482.

[48] [1] Briggs, The Cabot Family, II. 481. Stewart and Plunkett were Baltimore merchants. On Feb. 4, 1792, Perkins and Burling wrote to them: "Capt. Snyder's first Idea was to effect an exchange of flour for Negroes and to proceed to the Havannah. Since then he has declined this plan, and we have sold part of his cargo" (ibid., p. 482). The Phoenix, which visited Baltimore in 1800 and then sailed for Angola, may have belonged to Maryland owners. Catterall, Judicial Cases, I. 23.

1628, May 13, Southampton.[1]

. . . The Fortune has also taken an Angola man with many negroes, which the captain bartered in Virginia for tobacco, which has come home in a ship called the Plantation. . . .

1628, May 27, Southampton.[2]

Concerning the tobacco I advertised you of returned upon the Plantation for Negroes sold in Virginia, I came not to the Knowledge thereof until all or the most part of the tobacco was carried away to London. I find that there was imported 85 hogshds. and 5 buts of tobacco, being the proceeds of the said Negroes, and here received by Richard Paleford, John Sherron and one Watkins, being assignees for Arthur Guy, Captain of the Fortune, of London.[3] You may inform yourself of the contents of the tobacco exactly by one Peter Andrewes, Master of the said Plantation, who is now resident in London, being brother in law to one Mr. Vassall, a Turkey Merchant, eminent upon the Exchange.[4]

Edward Nicholas was secretary for the Admiralty under the Duke of Buckingham, and John Ellzey, collector of the Admiralty tenths for Hants, which facts explain the occasion for the two letters here printed. On May 10, 1628, Nicholas had written to Mr. Oliver, "Has spoken to Sir Henry Marten concerning the Duke's tenths of about 100 negroes taken in a Spanish vessel by the Good Fortune of London, set forth by Sir Thomas Love, John Hanger, and others" (Cal. St. P. Dom., 1628-1629, p. 107). This is probably the Fortune, of which the captain, Arthur Guy, was also part owner. Ibid., p. 289. See also note 3, below.

[3] The Fortune, of London, owned by Arthur Guy and others, was granted a letter of marque in July, 1626 (Cal. St. P. Dom., 1628-1629, p. 289). The incident is recounted by Neill (Virginia Carolorum, p. 59n.). Bruce suggests, without offering reasons for the belief, that the captain's name was Grey not Guy (Economic History, II. 73n.). One of the owners of the Fortune may have been Benjamin Brown of Lyme, who, in need of money, made over his interest in the profits of a voyage commanded by Arthur Guy to one Valentine Oldis, merchant, Nov. 19, 1627. Minutes of the Council and General Court of Virginia, 1622-1632, 1670-1676, pp. 157-158.

Whether Samuel had at this time any direct connection with the slave trade remains an unsolved problem. Thirty years later he was known as a Guinea trader. See this work, I. 82, 129n., 134.

The request is granted, provided that the petitioner give bail to the amount of five thousand pounds sterling to enter the Southbay or the Southriver [Delaware River] neither directly nor indirectly and that his people promise the same under oath nor to give anybody any information at sea or on land. Date as above.

Before me, Cornelius van Ruyven, Secretary in the service of the General Incorporated West-India Company, appeared Edmund Scarburgh, a resident of Hacco Macco in Virginia, who in the presence of the undersigned witnesses, promises, that he will not within four weeks from date either directly or indirectly enter the South bay and the Southriver or touch at any land within six miles south or north thereof, much less sail into, anchor at or come into harbor at said Bay or River, except it happened, which God forbid, that he by God's wind and weather were compelled to touch at the South Bay, in which case they shall not run in farther, than where they can save their lives, without sending any person from on board ashore, or allowing anyone to come aboard. Also, that during said time, neither he nor his crew will either directly or indirectly, by sea or by land, by the present or by any other barks or sloops nor even by any man in the world, furnish or give any intelligence to those in the aforesaid Countries. For the observance of all that is aforesaid he, Scarburch, becomes bound in the sum of five thousand pounds sterling to be paid to the West-India Company in case he or any of his men were hereafter found to have acted contrary hereunto; submitting to all courts, tribunals and judges his person and property, present and future. For greater security and observance of what is stated above Mr. Thomas Willett [2] becomes bail and co-principal in solidum, that all that is aforesaid shall be observed and effected by Edmund Scarburch and his people, pledging to that end his person and property, and subjecting the same to all courts, tribunals and judges.

52. Case of the Blessing, 1661-1662.[1]

Order and Instructions for Mr. Thomas Outlaw, Master of the "Blessing" of London Bound for Ginny dated Novr. 1661.

Sir, our Order to you is that winde and weather serving, you are to set saile for Tilberie Hope, and there to wayte for the opportunitie of a faire winde to carey the shipp into the downes, and from thence, with the first opportunitie to set saile, for the River of Reagrandie [2] upon the Coast of Barbary or Ginny or to any other Port or place, within one hundred and twentie Leagues of Cape de varde,

And there to dispose our Cargo Loaden on board of the shipp the Blessing for our best Advantage,

And our order is that if you can get Twentie Tunne of Olevants Teeth or upwards then to Returne for England, with your shipp and that Ladeing to the Port of London,

But if you cannot procure so many Teeth, then to get as many as you can Reserving as much of your Cargo, as will procure one hundred and fifty Negros at Least, and not exceed two hundred and twentie, which you are to transport to Mary Land in Virginia,

And when it shall please God you arrive there to repaire to Mr. Edward Loyd merchant, who is to assist you in disposeing of them to our best Advantage, And not to dispose of any in the Country, without his advise or approbation your provision excepted being one in the Twentie,

And further our Instructions are, with the helpe of Mr. Edward Loyd merchant to Relayde the shipp with what good shall be procured by him or what fraight shall there present,

And for want of fraight, then in such a case you may dispose of so many Negros for Tobacco and about tenn tunns of saxafras as will make up your fraight, and come for London, and there end your voyage, And now in the case of Mortallitie that if Mr. Edward Loyd should be deseased before you arrive, or you should finde him sicke, not able to assist you then in such a case so advise with Mr. Richd Preston a Planter there in the disposeing of the Negros, and relading of the shipp, as the other should have done,

And further our Order is that if the master should happen to depart this mortall life (which the Lord prevent) before the Cargo be all sould in Ginny, that Mr. John Smith and Maxamillion Spencer [3]

55. Nathaniel Bacon and Edward Jones to the Royal African Company, 1679.[1]

Virginia June the 25th 1679.

Here arrived in Yorke River the 17th May Last past the good Ship called the Arrabella whereof Jos. Pitck was formerly Comandr. who died at Guiynie and Wm. Booth is now Comandr. by him wee recd a Lett'r from Mr. Thomas Thurloe [2] wth a Bill of Lading for 201

[3] In June, 1677, John Jeffreys proposed to the Royal African Company to deliver to Virginia 150 negroes by April or May of the following year, "on the Compa's tearmes". The Court of Assistants evidently accepted the offer, since, on Aug. 14, the committee on shipping was instructed to prepare the agreement with Mr. Jeffreys ("Minute of the Court of Assistants", T 70: 77). Jeffreys had sent negroes to Virginia at least once before this date: on Oct. 18, 1677, one John Page presented to the Committee for Trade and Plantations on behalf of Jeffreys a petition for the payment of a bill of exchange drawn by Sir William Berkeley for £100 sterling, in payment for four negroes delivered to Berkeley (Va. Mag. of Hist., XXII. 357). The Page and the Barnham mentioned in this letter were Virginia agents of Jeffreys. It is probably to this voyage of the Katherine (which delivered 46 negroes to Jeffreys' agent in October, 1678) that reference is made in the somewhat unilluminating items in the "Council and General Court Records" for Sept. 30 and Oct. 4, 1678, which speak of the importation of more negroes than were allowed by the contract. Minutes, 1622-1632, 1670-1676, pp. 494, 519, 521.

Bessenger then Mast'r of the said Ship and dyed before the 7 dayes were out. The Gentl'm who had him hath Declared upon Oath That he did not Buy him of Tho. Bessenger but tooke the Negroe upon his request and Ald'm Jeffreyes agents refuse to Pay for him." T 70: 15.

She had carried 115 into Barbados not long before this, had disposed of 47, and had then sailed for Virginia, apparently with the remainder still on board. June 10, 1679, T 70: 10.

56. Instructions to Thomas, Lord Culpeper, 1679.[1]

49. And you are to give all due encouragement and invitation to Merchants and others who shall bring Trade into our said Colony or any way contribute to their advantage and in particular to the Royal African Company of this our kingdom of England.

[3] Another copy of this communication contains the following more explicit paragraph: "Wee recd. Orders from Mr. Tho. Shuster [Thurloe?] to take into Care the Refuge Negroes for the Royall African Company and to dispose of them for the best wee can which wee shall doe, they were 14 in Numb'r wee hartily wish the Factor had Lived to have saved us of that trouble for truly they are a sad parcell some of them soe old others soe Infirme that it is a Shame that such Negroes should be Shipped a board which serve only to anoy and destroy them of better value but we shall doe the best we can to put them off and give you Acco't. Here is 2 of them dead and 2 wee bleive will not Live Long and now good Negroes are soe plenty that few will buy bad though at Low Prizes" (T 70: 10). On July 22 Bacon and Jones again complained of the refuse negroes, who were not yet sold. T 70: 15.

[56] [1] Va. State Lib., McDonald Transcripts, V. 313-314. Lord Culpeper became governor of Virginia in 1677, but remained in England until the end of 1679. He reached Virginia in May, 1680, only to leave in August (Cal. St. P. Col., 1677-1680, pp. 131, 449, 455, 523, 588). His return to Virginia in December, 1682, did not prevent him from losing his patent the following August because of absence without leave (ibid., 1681-1685, pp. 251, 308, 385, 473). The first instructions to be found in the Calendar (1677-1680, p. 451) are those of Dec. 6, 1679, four days before he sailed for Virginia, but earlier instructions are referred to (ibid., p. 353) in the journal of the Lords of Trade, who on Apr. 16 had "settled" the instructions for Lord Culpeper. The influence of the African Company in England caused admonitions similar to these to be included in the routine instructions to the governors of all the colonies offering a market for slaves.

50. And you are to take care that there be no trading from Virginia or any of the Territories depending thereon, to any place or part in Africa within the Country of the Royal African Company. And you are not to suffer any ships to be sent thither without their leave or authority.[2]

51. And you are yearly to give unto Us by one of Our Principle Secretaries of State and to the Lords of our Privy Council appointed a Committee for Trade and Foreign Plantations an account of what number of Negroes the said Colony is yearly supplied with and at what rates and how paid for.[3]

57. William Fitzhugh to Ralph Wormeley, 1681.[1]

June 19th, 1681.

S'r. . . . I understand there are some Negro Ships expected into York now every day.[2] I am so remote that before I can have

[2] On the margin of the Virginia transcript is written: "There never went one Ship that I could hear of from Virginia thither but 'tis impossible in those great bays and waters to hinder Interlopers. But our poverty this last year has quite spoiled that Trade." Culpeper's method of making his reports seems to have been to write on the margin of his instructions. He is probably writing in December, 1681, after his first visit to Virginia (Cal. St. P. Col., 1681-1685, p. 157). The low price of tobacco had induced the Virginia assembly to request the king to order a suspension of planting. Culpeper, in his "Present State of Virginia" presented for the information of the Lords of Trade, emphasized the desperate condition of the industry and suggested various remedies. "But that which is more to us than all other things put together, and will be the speedy and certain ruin of the Colony, is the low price of tobacco. The thing is so fatal and desperate that there is no remedy; the market is overstocked and every crop overstocks it more. It is commonly said that there is tobacco enough in London now to last all England for five years; too much plenty would make gold itself a drug. Our thriving is our undoing, and our purchase of negroes, by increasing the supply of tobacco has greatly contributed thereunto. Free importation into Russia would revive our drooping spirits, for we want nothing but a vent." Ibid., p. 156; see also Beer, Old Colonial System, II. 148-152.

[3] On the margin of the Virginia transcript: "formerly about 5 or 600 in a Year by Estimate but now our Poverty deters Every one from dealing with Us", from Culpeper's reply of December, 1681. The instructions of Jan. 27, 1682, repeat the matter of the first two paragraphs above, then substitute the following: "And as wee are willing to recommend unto the said Company that the said Colonie may have a constant and sufficient supply of Merchantable Negroes at moderate rates in money or commodities, you are to take special care that payment bee duly made and within a competent time, according to their agreement. It being against reason to expect that any should send good wares to a known bad market" (Va. Mag. of Hist., XXVIII. 41; McDonald Transcripts, VI. 38). Throughout the last quarter of the century the difference between the complaints of the West India plantations over the scarcity of negroes and the need for them and the indifference of Virginia is noticeable. Beer, Old Colonial System, I. 367-368.

[57] [1] Va. Mag. of Hist., I. 37-38. William Fitzhugh, a lawyer by training, a planter and merchant in practice, had settled in Virginia about 1670. Here he died in 1701, the possessor of some 54,000 acres of land and many slaves. Ralph Wormeley, also a large land owner, was, in 1676, appointed one of the seven collectors of customs in Virginia, which had no port of entry. He became a member of the council in 1677, and secretary of state in 1693 (ibid., pp. 115-116n.; Beer, Old Colonial System, I. 279). A copy of the letter-book containing the letters here printed is in the possession of the Virginia Historical Society. The letters are printed in the Va. Mag. of Hist., vols. I. and II.

February 11th, 1682/3.

Mr. Jackson: As to your proposal about the bringing in Negroes next fall, I have this to offer and you may communicate the same to your owners and Employers, that I will deal with them for so many as shall amount to 50,000 lbs of Tob'o and cask which will be about 20 hhds. under the condition and at these ages and prices following, to say—to give 3000 lbs Tob'o for every Negro boy or girl,[2] that shall be between the age of Seven and Eleven years old; to give 4000 lbs Tob'o for every youth or girl that shall be between the age of 11 to 15 and to give 5000 lbs Tob'o for every young man or woman that shall be above 15 years of age and not exceed 24, the said Negroes to be delivered at my landing some time in September next, and I to have notice whether they will so agree some time in August next. And I do assure you and so you may acquaint them that upon your delivery and my receipt of the Negroes, according to the ages above mentioned and that they be sound and healthfull at their Delivery, I will give you such sufficient caution for the payment of the Tob'o accordingly by the 20th Decr. then next following as shall be approved of. The ages of the Negroes to be judg'd and determin'd by [3] The purchase here projected was not the first made by Fitzhugh. He had written to Capt. Francis Patis (Partis?) in the previous December that he had bargained with Mr. Vincent Goddard for two negroes at £29 sterling (Va. Mag. of Hist., I. 31). On July 14 Fitzhugh wrote again, Wormeley evidently having asked for more explicit directions about the purchase: "I desired you in my former to buy me five or six, whereof three or four to be boys a man and woman or men and women, the boys from eight to seventeen or eighteen, the rest as young as you can procure them, for price I cannot direct therein because boys according to there age and growth are valued in price" (ibid., p. 44). The Virginia price of a newly imported adult man was about £18. Boys might vary from £10 to £14 or £15.

[58] [1] Va. Mag. of Hist., I. 108; also in R. A. Brock's "New England and the Slave Trade", William and Mary College Quarterly, II. 176-177. Jackson's vessel belonged to residents of Piscataqua (Portsmouth), N. H., among whom was a Mrs. Cutts, to whom Fitzhugh had previously written giving advice about methods of carrying on trade with Virginia. On June 5, 1682, Fitzhugh sent to John Withers directions for the purchase of negroes, but the prices cited indicate that new negroes were not under consideration. Va. Mag. of Hist., I. 51.

[2] With tobacco at 1 d. per pound, these prices would be £12 10 s., £16 13 s. 4 d., and £20 16 s. 8 d. (Wertenbaker, Planters, p. 123). Brock gives the price of tobacco as 2 d. a pound at this period, but with the same prices for slaves, obviously a miscalculation. Brock, "New England and the Slave Trade", Wm. and Mary Coll. Quar., II. 177; see also Brock, "A Succinct Account of Tobacco in Virginia, 1607-1790", 10th Census, Statistics of Agriculture, p. 217, in which the price set on tobacco in 1682 is given as 10 s. per hundred weight.

two or three such honest and reasonable men here as your self shall nominate and appoint. The whole sum of the Tob'o to be paid in the compass of twenty miles, perhaps not so remote.

59. Lord Culpeper to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, 1683.[1]

September 20, 1683.

58 I have strictly forbid it [trading from Virginia to Africa] and verily Beleeve none from Virginia have ever traded there.

59 I never heard of any price set by the African Company on Blacks or of any bought of the said Company by any of the Inhabitants of Virginia, soe have had noe occasion to doe Any thing herein. But in regard of the Infinite profit that comes to the King by every black (far beyond any other plantation) at least six pounds per Head per Ann[2] and that the Low price of Tobaccoe requires It should be made as cheape as possible, And that Blacks can make it cheaper than Whites, I conceive It is for His Ma'ties Interest, full as much as the Countryes, or rather much more, to have Blacks as cheape as possible in Virginia.

60. Colonel William Byrd to Thomas Grendon, 1684.[1]

Virginia, June the 21st, 1684.

. . . Mr. Kennon and Pleasants have lately received 34 Negro's and 7 or 8 Tun of Rum and Sugar, besides dry Goods, which are all sold for next years pay, so that I believe a great part of the Tobacco in these parts is allready disposed of.[2] . . .

[59] [1] Va. State Lib., McDonald Transcripts, VI. 150, 152; Cal. St. P. Col., 1681-1685, p. 497.

[2] According to Bruce (I. 337) one man could produce at least 1600 lbs. of tobacco annually. The duty was 2 d. a pound. Culpeper was obviously ill informed concerning the activities of the African Company. On paper at least, it had set a price on negroes delivered in Virginia and, as has been seen (ante, nos. 54, 55), had sold cargoes there.

Thomas Grendon, a cousin of Byrd, had gone to England in February, 1683.

[2] Kennon and Pleasants apparently were not always so successful in disposing of their negroes as they seem to have been here. See an order on a petition of John Pleasants and Richard Kennon, printed by Bruce (II. 100-101, n. 6, from "Records of Henrico County, 1682-1701", p. 81): "On the petition of John Pleasants and the motion of Richard Kennon, consignees of William Paggin and Company, desiring the resolution of this Right Worshipful Court concerning some negroes of the said Company consigned them to sell, but at the time of listing tithables, remaining in their possession undisposed of: It is the opinion of the Court that the said Kennon and Pleasants ought not to pay levy for them this year, because the said negroes being goods belonging to merchants in England, ought not in any reasonable time to put them to more charge by taxes than other of their commodities imported thither."

61. Colonel William Byrd to Perry and Lane, 1684.[1]

Virginia, June 21st, 1684.

. . . I hope what you send will be early; Mr. Paggen haveing sent about a fortnight since into these parts 34 negros, with a considerable quantity of Dry Goods, and 7 or 8 tun of Rum and Sugar, which I fear will bring our people much in debt, and occasion them to bee carelesse with the Tobacco they make. . . .

On Apr. 25 Byrd had written to Perry and Lane: "What you wrote about English Servants I had anticipated by the Culpeper, and therefore shall say no more of it, for the negro's (if they come), I shall take some if they prove well." In the fall he again wrote to the same firm: "If you send the Pinke to Barbadoes on our acco't I would have by her 506 [5 or 6] Negroes between 12 and 24 years old" (Va. Mag. of Hist., XXIV. 229, 232). Perry and Lane were London merchants with large Virginia interests, such as are described by J. S. [64] [1] Va. Mag. of Hist., XXIV. 351; Va. Hist. Reg., II. 78. The Register ascribed the letter to Perry and Lane, which is probably correct. On Mar. 8, 1685, Byrd had written to this firm: "should have been glad to know whither wee might Expect any Negro's or not, that wee might (if yr. project had fail'd) have provid'd otherwise" (Va. Mag. of Hist., XXV. 50). On June 6 he wrote, probably to Perry and Lane: "Since my last I recd. one from you via Barbados, wch keeps us still in hopes of the Pinke, you formerly menconed: and wee now daily expect, if it should faile twould bee an unhappy disappointment haveing neglected all other ways of Supplying our Selves with those commodityes". Ibid., XXIV. 356.

The instructions of Oct. 24, 1683, are practically the same as these, as are those to Andros in 1692. After the passage of the act of 1698 the form, of necessity, was somewhat changed and those to Nicholson read: "You are to take care that there be no trading from Virginia to any place in Africa, within the charter of the Royal African Company otherwise than prescribed by the late act of parliament, Intituled an Act to settle the Trade to Africa" (Cal. St. P. Col., 1681-1685, p. 526; C. O. 5: 1357, p. 45; C. O. 5: 1310, p. 85). Francis, Lord Howard was lieutenant governor from Apr. 16, 1684, to Oct. 20, 1688.

August 16th, 1690.

Honoured Sir: . . . I will presume at his [2] Instance to give you the best method for such a Settlement, which is by lodging in some merchant's hand in London 150 or 200 £ for the buying a good, convenient seat of land . . . and then about such an other sum lodged in the hand of some of the Royall African company, who for that will engage to deliver negroes here at 16 or 18 or to be sure at £20 p head. . .. . A Settlement thus made, will make a handsome gentile and sure subsistence. . . .

68. Case of the Society, 1691-1692.[1]

Minutes of a Meeting of the Virginia Council.

Octobr. 20th 1691.

Ordered that an Order be prepared for the Rt. Honoble. the Lieut. The Council referred the controversy to the Lords of Trade. That body, after hearing from the Royal African Company that it regarded itself as in no way concerned, referred the case back to Virginia, where the Virginia council began a search for information with the order here printed. Ten days later Robert Caufield, who was acting as agent for the owners, obtained from the council a postponement of the hearing of the case because his witnesses were ill (ibid., pp. 196-197). [Deposition of James Lemount.][3]

October 30, 1691.

The Deposition of James Lemount, in regard to the landing of one hundred and twenty negroes and a quantity of Elephants teeth on the Eastern Shore, by officers and owner of the Ship Society, of Bristol, on sunday morning, the 7th August, 1687; and the loss of the vessel by being wrecked on the Coast on the same day. It appears the said Lemount and others afforded assistance in putting the negroes on shore, for which service he received "thirty pounds sterling", which the Master of the shipp "paid by two young negroes, a boy and a girle". The excuse given for landing these negroes and Elephants teeth, was that the ship was short of provisions, But the officer in command had been careful to enquire "Whereabout the Man of Warr lay," and "whether there weare conveniency there to land A Parcell of negroes?" before he ventured to bring his ship sufficiently near the shore to effect this. Coll. Cole, Collector, had seized the vessel, crew and cargo, and the latter being forfeited to the Crown, had been sold by him according to law.[4]

69. Orders of the Privy Council, 1692.[1]

November 3, 1692.

[Permission to Sir Richard Levett and others for the Katherine to sail to Guinea and load negroes for Virginia, on showing that they have license from the African Company for so doing and on agreeing to deduct the ship's complement from the quota directly assigned to the owners for the Virginia trade.][2]

[In a similar petition Thomas Starke, John Mudge and others, owners of the Concord,[3] allege] that having had no supplies of Blacks since the warr with France, and the Whites in their service growing out of their times and becoming free, their Plantations are falne under a great Scarcity of hands, so that they have not sufficient for the management of them. [Like conditional permission is granted, with the additional stipulation] that the Commissioners of the Customes on conferring with the merchants Trading to Virginia upon the intended Repartition for this yeares Trade do think fitt to assigne the aforesaid number of men to the Petitioners for Their respective Dividends.[4]

[6] Endorsed: "Sworn to before the Rt. Hon'able the Lt. Govr. and Councill. Test: W. Edwards, Clk Coun." Throughout April, 1692, the council gathered information concerning the Society and on June 24 transmitted a letter to the Lords of Trade relating to the case. *Ex. Jour. of Col. Hence Sir Richard Levett, though a person of considerable interest in that trade, has no ship assigned him for his share in that distribution: but Mr. Bayly offers the 13 men who were assigned for his ship Ann towards the Katherine's complement of 30, and his Majesty grants another seventeen out of the 30 assigned to Milford Haven, but not yet apportioned, for the voyage to Guinea and Virginia" (ibid., p. 220). "The Katherine is allowed, besides her 30 seamen, 1/3 of that number foreigners, and 1/5 of the whole complement landsmen, for looking after the negroes." Ibid., p. 221.

[4] To secure sufficient seamen for the navy it was customary to limit the number allowed to merchant vessels. In 1690 the Privy Council had allowed to the Maryland and Virginia trade 1200 English seamen, in addition to foreigners, who might make up one-quarter of the crew. The apportionment of this number among the merchants of each port was left to the Commissioners of Customs. The London traders to Virginia and Maryland had in 1690 been allotted 800 of the total, in 1691 their allotment was increased to 1000. Acts P. C. C., II. xxiii-xxiv.

Whereas the state house of this his majesties colony and dominion in which the generall assemblyes and general courts have been kept and held hath been unhappily destroyed and burnt downe, and it being absolutely necessary that a capitoll should be built with all expedition, and forasmuch as a more suitable expedient cannot be found for avoiding the laying a levy upon the poll for the building the same than by laying an imposition upon servants and slaves imported into this his majesties colony and dominion,

Be it enacted by the Governour, Councell and Burgesses of this present generall assembly and the authority thereof, and it is hereby enacted, That from and after the publication of this act . . . twenty shillings for every negro or other slave which shall be imported into this his majesties colony and dominion shall be from time to time paid and satisfyed to his majestie, his heirs and successors for and towards the erecting and building a convenient capitoll for this his majesties colony and dominion and for no other use, intent or purpose whatsoever, which said sume or sumes shall be paid by the importer or importers of such and for the better levying and collecting the said duty and impost,

Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, and it is hereby enacted, That from and after the publication thereof no servant or servants, negro or negroes, imported into this country shall be landed or put on shoar out of any shipp or vessell before due entry first made with the officer or collector appointed for the customes in such port or place where the same shall be imported, nor before the master of the said shipp or vessell hath made oath to such officer or collector who is hereby impowered and required to administer the same of the number of servants or slaves imported in such shipp or vessell and of the reputed place of the birth of such servant or servants, nor before the duty due and payable for the same shall be fully paid and satisfyed to such officer or collector, and that every warrant for the landing of such servants or slaves shall be under the hand and seale of the said officer or collector respectively upon paine that all such servants or slaves as shall be landed or putt on shore contrary to this act or the vallue thereof shall be forfeited and lost and shall be recovered of the importer or proprietor of the same.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, and it is hereby enacted, That if any master of shipp or vessell shall witingly or willingly make a false entry of any such servants or slaves and be thereof convicted he shall forfeit and pay for every such offence the sume of one hundred pounds sterling, and if any collector or officer shall directly or indirectly take or receive any bribe, recompence or reward to connive at any false entry of any such servants or slaves, or if any person or persons shall give or pay any such bribe or reward he or they so offending shall forfeit and pay the sume of one hundred pounds sterling, all which penaltyes and forfeitures in this act expressed shall be divided into three equall parts, one third part thereof to his majestie, his heirs and successors towards the better support of the government and the contingent charges thereof, one other third part to the governor for the time being, and the other third part to him or them that will sue or informe for the same by action of debt, bill, plaint or information in any court of record within this his majesties colony and dominion, in which no essoigne protection or wager of law shall be allowed.

[Collectors were to be appointed by the governor; all sums raised were to be accounted for to the treasurer of the colony; the act was to be in force three years.]

71. Lieutenant Governor Francis Nicholson to the Board of Trade, 1700.[1]

James Town, August 1, 1700.

. . . I have an account that there will be very few hogsheads of old tobacco left in the country after 4 or 5 ships are sailed, one of which is Capt. Joseph Moonday, who came lately from Guiny and brought into Yorke River about 230 negroes and I heard they were sold from 28 l. to 35 l. per head; the greatest price that has been known. There were as many buyers as negros, and I think that, if 2000 were imported, there would be substantial buyers for them. They expect several ships from Guiny with negros, but I am afraid that no more will come.[2] . . .

[2] On Aug. 27, 1700, Nicholson wrote to the Board of Trade: "I do not hear of any more negroes being come in, which I am sorry for, being they would make so much more tobaccos, which I hope would increase His Majesty's revenue; therefore wish that the African Company and others that trade thither would send in some, and that whilst the people have money to buy them, for it may so happen that if negro's don't come in within a year or two that people may dispose of their money some other way." Cal. St. P. Col., 1700, p. 497.

Most of the wealth consists in slaves or negroes, for if one has many workmen, much food-stuff and tobacco can be produced. These negroes are brought annually in large numbers from Guiné and Jamaica (the latter of which belongs to England) on English ships. They can be selected according to pleasure, young and old men and women. They are entirely naked when they arrive, having only corals of different colors around their necks and arms.[2] They usually cost from 18 to 30 pounds. They are life-long slaves and good workmen after they have become acclimated. Many die on the journey or in the beginning of their stay here, because they receive meagre food and are kept very strictly. Both sexes are usually bought, which increase afterwards. The children like the parents must live in slavery. Even if they desire to become Christians it is only rarely permitted, because the English law prescribes that after seven years service they are (in that case) to be freed in accordance with the Mosaic law.[3] When a slave is bought from the captain of a ship, he is not paid at once, but the slave so bought usually plants tobacco in order that the captain may be paid with it. Lately, before my departure, I was over night on a ship, which several days before had come from Guiné with 230 slaves.[4] They get them there [72] [1] "Report of the Journey of Francis Louis Michel from Berne, Switzerland, to Virginia, October 2, 1701-December 1, 1702." Translation in Va. Mag. of Hist., XXIV. 1-43, 113-141. The selection here printed is from pp. 116-117. The German original is in the Stadtbibliothek in Bern; see Faust, Guide to Materials for American History in Swiss and Austrian Archives, p. 72. Michel was at the time of writing this entry on his way to visit some Swiss families, possibly forty miles from Williamsburg.

[2] It is to be hoped that the traveller's information was more accurate at other points than here. Few owners of slave cargoes would have been so reckless as to send negroes north of the Caribbean waters without the protection of clothing, though it may have happened occasionally.

[3] Michel is likewise mistaken about the existence of law or custom granting freedom after seven years' service to Christianized slaves, though in the early days of negro slavery a sense of the impropriety of holding Christians as slaves retarded efforts to convert the imported negroes. To do away with this obstacle to Christianizing the blacks the assembly passed a law in 1667 declaring that baptism did not alter the condition of a person "as to bondage or Freedom" (Hening, II. 260). In 1670 an act, not to be found in Hening but known by a reference to it in 1682 (ibid., pp. 490-491), defined as slaves imported servants who were not Christians. This raised a difficulty which apparently had not been foreseen. West India slaves were often Christians, and when such was the case they could not be sold in Virginia. The act was therefore repealed and a law declaring slaves to be those servants whose native country was not Christian (excluding Turks and Moors) was substituted. The purpose of this legislation seems obvious. The colony was searching for a formula which should declare the status of the negro to be that of a slave, while it excluded indentured servants from such a category. For further discussion of the effect of baptism on the status of the blacks in Virginia see Catterall, Judicial Cases, I. 57-59; see also Neill, Terra Mariae, pp. 146-147.

[4] There seems here no reason to accept the editor's assumption that Michel was referring to French Guinea. The term Guinea was used very loosely and tells no more than that the negroes were not from the Gambia region but came from the Gold and Slave coasts. Indeed, it is occasionally used as synonymous with West Coast of Africa.

for a small sum, as also gold and ivory, but a hundred of them died on the journey to Virginia. It is said to be a very unhealthy climate. Half of the sailors died also, including the brother of the captain, who had sailed along as clerk. The others were sickly and yellow in their faces. It often happens that the ships must be left in Guiné, because everybody dies of sickness. The captain, to whom I refer, was named Schmid. He almost shared the same fate. I was surprized at the animal-like people. The savages (Indians) are so far better breed. Among such people food tastes so badly, that one can hardly stand it. The negro fever is due to this, because it is their common sickness. . . .

At all these places where you shall trade you must shew all your small Comodityes that are not Staple att New Callebarr and aske for them more then I have barred them att, especially what they seem to fancy and alwayes observe to persuade them to take of your Hatts Pewter some Clapper Bells Round Brass Bells Shirts Knives Lookinglasses Trunks Chaires Tables Flints and some Cases of Spiritts for they are not Staple Comodityes att New Callebarr and Bandy as other goods are. What Slaves you buy in them places lett them be very likely to believe you may buy them for Eight or Nine Iron Barrs per head but you may give to Tenn or more for very likely men and I would have you att all these places buy what Yeames you cann and when please good you shall arrive att New Callebarr take all care possible you cann to find out the best depth of Water over the Barr which I am informed is to Eastward take time before you venture over and send out your Boats to sound all about to find out the best depth of water. For your Governance to goe over New Callebarr as follows videl[i]cet New Callebarr is the Eighth or Ninth opening from Cape Formoso a very fair large opening larger than any of the Rest which when you have well opened and Fogo Point which is on the westside of it bares North and North and by west distance about three Leagues then you will have a Spitt of Sand which lyes to the westward of Fogo Point about Two Miles from you which you will see above water or else the Sea to breake upon itt and when you have stood so farr to the Eastward as to bring Bandy Point which lies on the Eastermost side of the River and the Eastermoste parte of Bollante Cope Island to be just shutt in with Bandy Point will bare North East and by East or East or East North East then you may steer in with Bandy Point East North East or North East and by East your sounding being without the Barre five four and about three Fathom water hard sand and when you are upon the Pilch [Pitch?] of the Barr which is about a Cables length over you will have about three Fathom att High water likewise the Spit of Sand which lyes from Fogo Point to the Eastward will be a Breast of you. To know when you are over the Barr you will find the water deeper from three to four five Six and Seaven Fathom water soft clay ground and when you are over the Barr you may Steer away more Northerly to bring Bandy Towne open which lyes on the Eastside of the Eastermost Rivers there being Two Rivers And when you have the River fair open you may runn up keeping the Eastside a board from Tenn to Fifteen Fathom water graduate sounding and soft ouzey ground and bringing Bandy Point South west and Bandy Towne South you may anchor in Fifteen Fathom water about a Musquett shott of Shoare. the water Ebbs and Flows hereabout Seven or Eight Foott and when please God you are gott over saile up to the Point which is near Callebar and then anchor where you may ride open to Bandy as well as to New Callebarr

(as I am informed) so that the Negroes may see you to come on board out of both places and by that meanes you will have an oppertunity of trading from both places and agreeing with them for the purchase of your Slaves at a reasonabler rate then if you went wholly to one place and have a quicker dispatch. The people att New Callebarr are much greater than the people of Bandy but there are more Shipps go to Bandy than new Callebarr especially Dutch and Portugueese the Chanell being better to Bandy than to New Callebarr so that Slaves and Teeth are dearer att Bandy than att New Callebarr and also I am informed that there is more plenty of Slaves and Teeth at New Callebarr than att Bandy. When please God you arrive there you will be sensible of the trade of each place therefore leave it wholly to your discretion where to cutt a trade at one or both places and which will engage to furnish you cheapest and quickest there cutt for the most and if they should pretend to keep up their Slaves High you must declare you will be gone. Formerly Men Slaves have bought for Nine and Tenn, Women for Seaven Pecys [3] and girles for five and six Iron Barrs per Head But rather than lye there if you cann have a quick dispatch you may cutt a trade for Twelve for Men Nine for Women and Six or Seaven for Boys and Girles as you shall see they reserve. The trade which you cutt with the Kings is alwayes the highest, those Slaves which are brought by others out of the Countrey you may buy cheaper. If they should hold upp their Slaves higher than is expected your holding off Two or Three dayes will make them comply with you if there be no other Shipps but if there be you must doe as well as you cann. I have inclosed an account what Custome used to be given to the Kings to Trade. Note That Iron Barrs is the Staplest Comodity there and you haveing great plenty of them may give Seaven or Eight Iron Barrs with other goods for a Man Slave and for a Woman five and Six Iron Barrs with other goods there is no certainty for Boys or Girles of any sort of goods but as you cann agree and have to spare. In Copper for Men Three or Four Copperr Barrs for Women Two Copper Barrs that being the next Staple Comoditye and in other goods you must make upp the Rest of the Barrs you are to give. You may be asked for Guinea Stuffs but you have none. you have a good quantity of Blew Callicoes which is in great esteem there but you cannot sell them for more than a Copper Barrs length for a Copper Barr nor you must not sell them for less. the Pewter is not soe much desired but will goe off for Slaves with other goods. Beads Manelices [4] Clapper Bells and severall other goods are in very good esteem and will go of with Iron and Copper for Slaves. I cannot direct you how much of each sort of all the goods you shall certainly give for a Slave for some will have more or less of each sort only your Iron and Copper them sorts you must keep att a certainty as near as you cann for Men Slaves but for Women Boys and Girles you may lessen the Quantity of Iron and Copper and make them take more of other goods that you have most off. Alwayes those goods that are not much desired putt off for Boys and Girles Teeth and Yeames and all the parcells of goods that are not Staple being not of a certaine value there you must endeavour to gett more for them then I have barred them att but if you cannot gett so much for Hatts Shirts Chaires Tables Cases of Knives Flints and Horse Bells and Trunks and looking glasses and Cases of Spiritts you may abate. I doe beleive I have advised you the needfull as to the sale of the Cargoe which with your discretion doubt not but you will buy your Slaves as cheape and dispose of your Cargoe as well as others have done. You have a Cargoe enough to buy four hundred and fifty Slaves and above three

[4] Manelloes, the metal rings frequently mentioned in African trade.

Tunn of Teeth and some gold dust and Provision sufficient for the Slaves therefore desire you will endeavour to buy all the Teeth you cann refuseing none that are large. At the first of your Slaving you may venture to dispose of the value of Seaven or Eight hundred Barrs for Teeth and Mallegatoes. I would have you if it be not loss of time to fill the Partition of the Beane room with Mallegata and what dry Casks you have empty. you must observe that all Teeth that have any Rents Cracks or any part broaken off are much less in value then if they be clear. You must not buy any Negroes that are above Thirty yeares of Age and take perticular care that both Men and Women Boys and Girles be all clear from any distemper burzen [brusen?] or any sore upon them alwayes takeing the doctors advice upon every Negroe that you buy so that you may buy none but what are healthy sound and clear limbed alwayes keeping an account entring every day of the Month what Negroes and quantity of Teeth Mallegata Yeames and Gold dust you buy and the perticular quantityes of what goods you give in Barter for each Negroe or Negroes and for each Tooth and Teeth and each quantity of Yeames Gold dust and Mallegata that you shall buy of any one Man att one time. And when you have bought four hundred and fifty Slaves or more and also Teeth Gold dust and Mallegata and Provisions as much as your Cargoe will purchase or that if it should soe happen Contrary to expectation that you cannot purchase above four hundred Slaves or not soe many without tarrying a long time for them and that per sicknesse or any other reason that you shall judge it best to Saile from thence with what you have You must make the best of your way to Virginea and go up the Bay to the opening of Yorke River and come to anchor without the River so that you may not be obleiged to enter your Ship there and send one of your Mates with your Boate to Tyndall Point and there he must hire a horse and ride up to Mattapony in King and Queen County and goe to Mr Henry Fox and there you shall receive orders where to go with your Negroes and in the mean time take perticular care and also at all other times that none of your Negroes is runn a shoare for if any be your Ship and Cargo will be co[n]fisticated to the Government and you and your Shipps Company to the Owners here. And you must deliver to Mr John Sheffeild to whom my order is which you will receive from Mr Henry Fox all your Negroes, Teeth, Mallegata, and Gold dust for to take an account and weigh and give bills of lading for them to be delivered att London to me freight free And when you are slaved and come from Guinea you must fill up Bills of lading mentioning the number of Slaves Quantity of Teeth Mallegata and Gold dust that you have then on board and consigne them to Mr John Sheffeild or my Assignes in Virginea for my account and Company And what remaines of the Cargoe if any deliver to Mr John Sheffeild or my orders in Virginea which you will receive at Mr Foxes. The Portugueese that come to Bandy and St Thomay[5] where you touch to water and take in Provisions they generally do buy the Remaines of Cargoes with gold they purchase att other places so hope you will putt of[f] all your Cargoe And as soon as you come from Slaving Copy out the whole disposall of your Cargoe for both Men Women Boys and Girles Slaves and also for Mallegata Gold Teeth and Provisions and likewise an Invoyce of what goods you left that you may have ready to enclose and send per any Ship that you shall meett with bound for England adviseing how many Negroes you had then liveing and a perticular account in every respect of the Voyage to that day that in case of your Mortality I may know what to demand of them that shall succeed you. And when please God you arrive att Virginea you must deliver a coppy of the same to Mr John Sheffeild or to my order which you shall receive from Mr Henry Fox sealed up and directed to me in London. In Case of your Mortality which I pray God in his Mercy to prevent as soon as you find yourselfe ill deliver a Copy of all your Barters and disposeing of the Cargoe and goods unsold and what Negroes, Teeth, Mallegata and Gold dust and all perticulars as above directed to your Second Mate or any other that you cann best trust so that nothing may be concealed from me and the owners per the Cheife Mate or him who takes possession after you and take care that the Boatswaine and other officers keep the Ship cleane and them and no other of your Men abuse the Negroes and also be sure you keep a continuall Centry to prevent your Negroes getting to your Armes or any riseing per them. Wash your decks with Vinegar and smother between decks with Pitch and Tarr every other day or as you shall see occasion and prevent your Negroes coming up in the Night as much as you cann for the Cold dews in the Night hath been the cheife occasion of the Negroes Gripes and endeavour what you cann to make your Negroes Chearfull and pleasant makeing them dance at the Beating of your Drumm etc. In fair weather keep them upon decks as much as you cann giveing them dramms when occasion and they that have the Gripes to Boyle water and thicken it with Flower and chaulk for them and also to rellish your Beans and other food for your Negroes with some of your Beefe as you shall see occasion and for change lett them have a day in a week of Grout [6] or more if there be enough. All this I leave to your discretion to order as you shall see fitt. Take a perticular care that your doctor and his Mate doe daily their duty in looking after their Negroes that they want for nothing, the whole benefitt of the Voyage lyes in your care in Preserving the Negroes lives. trust not to the Account your Officers shall give you of your Provisions and Stores but examine them yourselfe every week and that you see your Cooper search the Water Casks every week that if any leake it may be prevented. trust to no man but see that every man do his duty in his Station and that the Steward Boatswaine Cooper Carpenter and Gunner give in writeing every week what Stores is expended dureing the whole Voyage and that you enter them in a booke to be delivered to me when please God you returne and that you take care your Yeames are well dryed and stowed away where they cann take no whett and not be bruised and be sure you purchase Yeames enough early and use no Beans nor Grout nor meat while you are a Slaving nor till after you are come away from St Tomay not till your Yeames are almost spent without they will [not?] keep. These b[e]ing all at present that I cann think of only praying to God for your health and a prosperous Voyage I am your Friend THO. STARKE.

Post: Faile not to lett me hear from you per all oppertunityes especially when you first go into a Port and when you depart from thence and be sure you alwayes advice what letter or letters with their severall dates which you shall have received from me after your last writeing to me. When please God you arrive at St Thomay enquire for Raphaell Luin Coeltha from whom I received a letter per Doctor Young concerning the Ship Concord Henry Foster deceased late Commander giveing an Account that he had in his possession the Produce of the Ship Concord her Negroes and English Cargoe which as I am informed per the doctor that the Governour seized and putt to publick sale and turned all the Men out of the Shipp to shift for themselves and would not allow them Provisions nor nothing else for their support t[——] the occasion of this I cannot understand but am afraid the doctor and the Shipps Company that was liveing belonging to the Concord joyned with the Dutch Captain

[6] Grout was a coarse meal. The term is occasionally used for malt before fermentation.

Mathias Spreque who lent hands to bring the Concord from Bandy, Therefore I desire you will enquire and gett what prooffe you cann of the Doctors and Dutchmans proceedings whether they made sale of any Negroes or goods out of the Shipp and what designe and where the doctor did designe to go with the Ship or dispose of the Cargoe there and what reason caused the Governour to seize of the Shipp Slaves and Cargoe and to gett account of the Shipp and her Materialls the Number of Slaves the perticulars of all the English goods and every thing that was on board with Account of the Sales and prove it as well as you cann before a Notary for to bring to me haveing no account of the Sales or perticulars from Raphael Luin Coeltha. Your care in examining into the truth of this matter will obleidge your Friend T: S:

I haveing barred all the goods as above and on the other side I shall not enumerate here upon the severall perticulars.

When you first come to Callebar or Bandy the Kings belonging to each towne will demand custome upon your first trading and upon the cutting the trade you may pay the Custome for Two Hundred Slaves and so as you buy to pay the Custome which is two Manelioes per Head in such goods as you shall think fitt or cann pay in but be sure you agree before you pay Your Custome what you shall give for Men and Women Slaves and the value you must deliver your severall goods att and if possible doe not agree to give above Tenn Iron Barrs for Men Slaves and Seaven or Eight for Women and five or six for Boyes and Girles. When I first traded there Men were sold for Eight or Nine Iron Barrs and Women Boys and Girles under proportionably but since the trade hath been spoiled per some Strangers which have given Twelve for Men Nine for Women and Boys and Girles five six or seaven Iron Barrs per Head and if you cannott gett them under you must do so to All which I leave to your discretion to cutt a trade as Low as you cann but I hope you [will] not abuse my liberty and give more than you need to do. It is usuall to make some present to the Kings and great Men which are called dashes to the value of an Iron Barr to some and to the value of One Copper Barr or two to the others as you will see reason if it be a little more especially to a King you may present him with a laced Hatt or something else that he shall fancy if it be to the value of five or six Iron Barrs as you will see his kindness in Trade with you deserve and be pretty free with your Liquors to him and them that are your cheife traders and treat them handsomely for it is usuall for the Kings and Great Men to present a Negroe or two for their kind entertainment and dashes and others will present you with some small gifts of Teeth etc. Note that Yeames are bigger or lesser and are bought from one hundred to one Hundred and Eighty per Iron Barr. The Biggest and Best Kings Yeames are one Hundred per Iron Barr and though I mention only Iron Barrs to buy them I mean the value of an Iron Barr in other goods which are not Staple Comodityes for Slaves But if you have Iron to spare you may give Iron att all places where you trade. buy Yeames that you may have early as many as you shall have occasion for for the Slaves you are to buy. I am informed that King William the King of Bandy played the Rogue with Captain Foster and kept up his Slaves at a very High Price untill Foster had cutt a trade with King Robin att New Callebar, as soon as he see that he lett him have Slaves which before he would not and Fosters people being Sick and he and his Mates dying the doctor informs me that King William did come on Board and encourage the Negroes to rise and had not a Dutch Man arrived and assisted them to carry away the Shipp the Doctor sayes that he does believe King William would have destroyed them. Therefore I would have you tell King William that if he don't treat you very Civilly I will send a Shipp that shall fire and destroy all the Towne and that I did intend to have presented him with a Scepter and Crowne but haveing this Account I send none. All this I leave to your discretion to act as you shall see fitt. I sent per Captain Gray a Scepter and Crowne to present to King Robin if he deserved itt. Here underneath are the names of severall great Men and traders att Bandy viz. King William, Alderman Booby, Adam Jeffry, Captain John, Captain Tom Bolio, Duke Tundo, Lame Dick, Captain Serco, John, Godfrey, Keach, Gundy, Guinea Company and others. Your Cargo being considerably more than will Slave you be sure to encourage them to bring Teeth on Board and buy all you can and send your Boate up into the Rivers to buy Teeth as well as Slaves. . . . [9]

Note that I have not taken any notice of the value of pi[ece]s Cotton, Thread, Tobacco, Beans, Spiritts, Beefe and grout which are for the use of the Negroes. I pray take perticular care that your Shipps Company do not make use of the Tobacco Liquors or anything else that is for the use of the Negroes nor nothing imbezilled but duly given to the Negroes as there is occasion. the Cotton are to make them Mantles that are not well. Note that when you are a Slaving all your Iron Barrs your Boatswaine delivers out of the hold and all other goods you must take into your great Cabin and keep them under Lock and Key and appoint one Man that you cann trust to deliver out what goods you send for For you must not carry any of the Negroes you trade with into your Cabin where your goods are but keep them upon quarter deck and their Bargain with them and send downe to him that is in your Cabin for what goods you sell or want to see and you must alwayes write upon a peice of paper what goods and the quantity you will have sent unto you and upon the delivery of that Tickett to him that is intrusted with your goods he deliver the goods and file upp the Tickett and so for what Iron you want you must send a Tickett mentioning the number of Barrs that you would have the Boatswaine deliverr att a time and the Boatswaine must file upp your Ticketts and every Night you must compare with the Boatswaine and the Man that delivers the goods out of the Cabin and see your Account that you have kept of the goods sold do agree with the Ticketts you have sent to them that day your Ticketts being dated the Month and day per this meanes daily observing this method you cannot loose any goods and file up your Ticketts as you adjust with them and keep them for Vouchers to answear your Account of Sale And alwayes when you first open any Chest Caske or Bundle examine the whole contents of each number before you dispose of any and be sure Alwayes shew all sorts of your severall goods which are not Staple and force as many off as you cann. Your Tables Chaires Trunks and other goods which is not common with them doe not let them know but that you have but very few of them sorts. I desire that you will take perticular care that your Ships Company do not drink of Palme Wine or any other Liquors to disorder them and that they do not lye open in the nights to the Air where the dews may come upon them which practice hath caused a great Mortality and overthrown many Voyages. And remember that your Bunches of Beads have all five Marshes in them and that you must unloose them all and bind them upp in four Marshes.

London October the Twenty Eighth One Thousand Seaven hundred. James Westmore: This day received yours of the Twenty Seaventh Currant per your Wife who is gott well home and am satisfyed with your Sailing and hope these will find you Safe in the Downes and faile not to send me a perticular account from the Gunner Carpenter and Boatswaine of the goods they have received for stores and otherwayes from every Tradesman and also what salt was used in repacking the Meat vizt. West Ship-Carpenter, Canning Blockmaker, John Todd Ropemaker, Edward Thorne Smith, John Padley Dealeman, and what others that I have not named as Millison Sailmaker and the Cooper etc. I am afraid you have forgott Forelocks and Riveтts for the Shackles. I do not find any note for them. I have here inclosed a letter to Captain Roger Gray and not Sealed that you may read it and after you have read it Seale it up and deliver it to him he being wholly hired per me and all his Cargoe my Adventure only One Eighth part that I lett Captain Keach have. I desire you and he will joyne your Interests together for the most advantage you cann in Slaving. If he be not slaved before you arrive see that you may not prejudice each other but both to contrive and study your severall interests as one and if any other Ship or Shipps should be Slaving both you to hold together for your owne Benefitts. I have since considered of your touching upon the Gold Coast and these are to countermand my former orders that you must not touch upon the Gold Coast only the grain Coast as you go along to buy Mallagata and that must be with very little hinderance of time. When you come to Cape Formosoe go directly to New Callebarr and if you find Shipps there that you cannot have a quick dispatch you may send your longe Boate down to Tone and a long Shoare as far downe as to Cape Formoso as you shall think fitt for do verily believe there is soe many Ships gone to Old Callebarr that you cann have no trade there. I pray God direct you. I leave all to your discretion to act as you shall see reason. I bought Thirty five Quarters of Beanes but as I remember you have but Twenty Eight quarter on Board and I haveing paid the Tenn per Cent to the Affrican Company [10] you may take Seaven quarter more on board and per reason you do not touch upon the Gold Coast to buy corn I would have you buy Seaven quarter of Beans. I gave Twenty Shillings per quarter but if you cannot buy them soe you must give a Shilling or Two or Three more rather then go without them. they must be Old Beans or else they will not keep and if you have time and cannott gett them att Deale you may have them at Sandwich. inquire there for Mr Thomas Jenning, he I am well acquainted with and he will give you creditt upon your drawing a bill on me if you shew him but this part of the letter. The cheife Mate and second Mate, Boatswaine, Gunner, Doctor and his Mate as also John Phelps, Ralph Scott and John Reade have all signed to the agreement of paying of wages but the Carpenter and Carpenters Mate nor none of the other seamen have done it. Therefore I have sent you on the other side a Coppy what I would have them sign to which is as the Mates and the rest have done and when signed send me it upp. I hope you have putt the man that pretends to be a Cooper at worke that you may see what he cann doe and let me know how you approve of him and all mens names you must send me that you have Shipt which I did not pay at Gravesend and what wages. I hope your doctor is on board. he had of me Two Paire of Sheets. one paire of them were very large. I pray see that he have them on board. this is all I cann think off. I pray God send you a fair wind and be sure to take the first oppertunity to saile and in all things observe your orders. praying to God for your health and prosperous Voyage I am your assured Freind THO. STARKE.

Wee the subscribed, Vincent Hostwell Carpenter, Richard Jones Carpenters Mate and soe name every Man that have not signed and when all their names are mentioned then you must say have shipt ourselves on board the Ship Africann Galley James Westmore Commander bound for Guinea and from thence with Slaves to Virginea and back to London to have as follows viz. Vincent Hostwell Carpenter three pounds per Month, Richard Jones Carpenters Mate one pound fifteen Shillings per Month, and all the rest as their Wages are. Upon the arrivall of the Shipp Affrican Galley at Virginea or any of his Majestyes Plantations in the West Indies which shall be her delivering Port of Slaves etc. then and there their wages to be due but in case the said Shipp should mis carry which God forbid and not to arrive at Virginea or any other of his Majestyes Plantations to deliver her Negroes and loading then no wages to be due nor demanded. Witness our hands the day of the Month and year and soe all to subscribe.

If you should find that they are not willing to doe it you must omitt it rather than breed any difference but first you may make only for the Carpenter and his Mate and gett their hands which I doe beleive they will not deny doing it per reason all the Officers have done it and it is very probable that all the rest will follow.

LONDON November the Twenty first One Thousand Seaven hundred. James Westmore: I hope these will find you in health and safe arrived att New Callebar. I am greatly concerned that there is so many Ships bound for New Callebarr there being three Shipps bound there which went out with you besides Captain Gray and Captain Edwards per whom these goe and others as I am informed is designed thither which will not be long after him all which I fear cannot gett their Complement of Slaves there but do hope you may gett a Trade att Tone and other places adjacent as formerly directed You being acquainted with the trade and severall places in the Bite leave it wholly to your discretion to send or go with your Ship to any place or places where you cann best procure your Slaves but desire you will first send your Boat and be well assured of your Slaving before you remove your Ship and if it should soe happen that you cannot buy your Slaves at the prices I have formerly advised you must give such prices as you cann buy them att and rather than you should lye a long time there and run the hazard of your health Ships Company and Negroes and not to go of from thence in good time before the Rains to Virginea in July I would have you saile with Three hundred Negroes if you cannott gett more, all which I leave to your discretion praying to God to direct you for the best. As I formerly advised you that I would have you consult and advise with Captain Gray and assist him what you cann endeavouring for his Interest next unto your owne and if it should so happen that you should find a place where you cann Slave better than where you are I would have you keep that to yourselfe untill you are Slaved but after you have accomplisht what you designe and have secured your owne Slaves than acquaint Captain Gray and give him your advice for his Slaving and in all things do you and he hold together and conceal from others your intention and management in your Slaveing whereby it may be a benefitt to your selfe and Captain Gray. I had rather you should go away for Virginea with Three hundred Slaves than to tarry there the Raines and run the hazard of Sickness in your Shipps Company and Slaves in the time of the Raines for it may soe happen that you may loose more Slaves in tarrying the time of the Raines and with the Sickness that may be occasioned by the Raines in your voyage to Virginea than you may buy in the time of the Raines and if Captain Gray should loose soe many men as should disable him and you have men to spare I would have you supply him or his Shipps Company if he be dead to enable them to proceed their Voyage and so I have writt to him to do the same if please God you should have the like occasion and he be capable of spareing any help. Conclude praying to God for your health and good success in all your endeavours assuring you that your honest and Prudent Management shall ever be rewarded in future concerns by him who is your Reall Freind T. 74. Case of the Dolphin and the Mermaid, 1705.[1]

[Petition of Sir Richard Levett and William Lone to the Queen.]

Feb. 18, 1704/5.

Sir Richard Levett and William Lone, in behalf of themselves and the rest of the owners of the Dolphin and Mermaid now lying in Bristol outward bound for Callabar. These ships, carrying letters of marque, and being lately arrived from Virginia,[2] where they delivered in Sept. last 546 slaves for the benefit of the inhabitants there and in Maryland, and paid also to the said Governments 546 l. by virtue of an Order of Councill in those Colonies made for all ships bringing slaves there to pay 20 s. per head for every slave towards the building of a Colledge and other charitable uses,[3] and were afterwards not permitted by the said Governours of Virginia and Maryland to take in any of the growth of those Plantations, unless they would continue there untill a convoy should present from some other of your Majesty's Plantations, there being no convoy there to convoy them to England, altho' built on purpose to saile without convoy, nor were permitted to clear in their ballast directly from thence for England, but were obliged upon their being cleared, to give bond to touch at the Island of Maderas, which severe usage being of great discouragement to your Majesties subjects adventuring their estates for the support of your Majesties Plantations and to trade in general, Petitioners pray for H. M. letters commanding all and every of the Governours of your Majesties Plantations in the West Indies or Virginia, into what Port soever the said ships shall of choice put in or by contrary winds be forced into, not to detain them beyond the [74] [1] Cal. St. P. Col., 1704-1705, pp. 63-64. The covering letter of Sir Charles Hedges, recently appointed secretary of state, was sent with this petition to the Board of Trade Feb. 21, 1705. Hedges did not ask for an opinion on the "impressment of men, for which there is a standing rule" (ibid., p. 388; C. O. 5: 1314, no. 39, and 5: 1361, pp. 50-53). There is a confusion of dates in the Calendar, which has caused the placing of Hedges's first letter after the reply of the Board of Trade.

[2] The Mermaid, Capt. James French, a London not a Bristol vessel, was reported among the Virginia arrivals Aug. 8, 1704. The Dolphin does not appear among the Virginia entries until June 13, 1707. She probably entered in Maryland alone on the voyage of 1704. See ante, no. 14, and post, no. 130.

[3] This must refer to the act passed in April, 1704. If the petitioners are correct, the purpose for which the revenue from the duty was to be applied was not that stated in the earlier acts which this continues.

time their Commanders shall judge agreeable to the interest of the owners, nor that any of their ship's crew shall be lyable to be imprest by any of your Majesty's Commanders of ships of war, etc.[4]

[Representation of the Board of Trade.][5]

March 2, 1704/5.

Though it do's in the Generall very much contribute to the security of a trade that all ships bound from the Plantations to England do saile with convoy according to your Majesty's Instructions to your Majesty's Governors in America, yet forasmuch as these two ships are designed for the coast of Guinea and from thence to Jamaica, with negroes, which may likewise promote the trade with the Spaniards, so that the time of their arrival at, and departure from the Plantations cannot be so well ascertained as to depend upon convoys, and they being light sailors and of force, we have nothing to object why your Majesty may not grant your orders to your said Governors to permit the said ships to sail without convoy for the present voyagge to be performed within 12 months.

[4] The Privy Council at the same time had two further requests from these petitioners, one for protection from impressment, on the score that it rendered impotent African vessels which might be useful to her Majesty's service; the second a request for passes to sail without convoy to Calabar and Virginia. Lone, who was evidently managing the business, attended the meeting of the Board of Trade on Feb. 23, and was directed to obtain fuller information from the masters in Bristol. On Feb. 27 he reappeared with the statements of the masters, to learn that the Board of Trade could make no report until it had a statement from the Privy Council or the Queen on the Order in Council involved. The petition here printed was returned to Secretary Hedges on Mar. 2, with the representation which follows. The petition itself bears the following endorsement: "H. M. approves of the Report so far as that the ships shall not be stopt for convoys, letters to the governors accordingly; as to the press, care is taken for that in a Gen'll Standing Order, to the Governor and Commander." The request for passes to sail at once was referred to the Admiralty, on whose recommendation it was granted Mar. 13 (B. T. Jour., 1704-1709, pp. 99, 102; C. O. 5: 1361, pp. 55-56; Acts P. C. C., II. 456). Though the object of the convoy system was to protect English shipping, merchants objected to it strongly and requests for passes to sail without convoy were frequent. The grounds on which such special requests were made were the necessities of some needy community, the perishable nature of the cargo, or some service done for the government which entitled the doer to reward. The form of procedure in considering such petitions may be seen in Acts P. C. C., II. 544. Among the vessels for which special consideration was asked were the Thomas and John, for a voyage to Guinea and Virginia, Jan. 25, 1702; the Morris to Guinea and Virginia, "with negroes for the petitioners' and others plantations in Virginia", Apr. 12, 1702; the Alexander, Giles Love, to Guinea and Virginia, Jan. 8, 1708; the Dolphin, Samuel Payne, to Guinea, Virginia, and Maryland, October, 1708. Ibid., II. 388, 393, 492, 544.

A paper similar in substance is to be found in Manuscripts of the House of Lords, 1706-1708, new ser., VII. 275-276, among the papers of a select committee appointed (1707) to receive proposals for fitting out privateers in the West Indies (see Journals of the House of Lords, XVIII. 341, 342). A circular letter in accordance with the representation of the board was prepared on Mar. 6, 1705. Cal. St. P. Col., 1704-1705, p. 428.

75. Act for laying an Imposition on Liquors and Slaves, 1705.[1]

Forasmuch as the late Impositions upon liquors and upon servants and slaves imported into this colony and dominion have proved very usefull and advantageous, and that no better expedient can be found to lessen the levy by the poll or to defray the charge of any publick design than impositions of that nature. . . .

And be it further enacted, That the sum of twenty shillings shall be paid for every negro or other slave which after the said five and twentieth day of May shall be imported or brought into this colony and dominion from any port or place whatsoever by the importer or importers of the same.[2]

[No slaves to be landed until due entry is made.]

Provided always, and it is hereby further enacted, That if the importer of any liquors or slaves for which the dutys and customs according to this act shall be paid shall within six weeks after the importation thereof into this colony and dominion be desirous to export the same or part thereof in such case the said importer shall give . . . a particular account of the slaves he intends to export to the collectors with whom at their importation they were entered and shall subscribe the same and declare upon oath that the duty or custom for the liquors and slaves he desires to export were at the entry duly answered and paid according to this act, and that the said liquors and slaves shall be directly carried out of this dominion and not sold, delivered or put on shore within the same and then it shall be lawfull for the said collector and he is hereby required and enjoyned to allow to the said importer three-fourths of the duty or custom paid for the said liquors and slaves so to be exported, any thing in this act contained to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

And be it further enacted, That if the master of any ship or vessell importing slaves after the publication of this act shall wittingly or willingly make a false entry of any of the slaves so imported and be thereof convicted he shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of one hundred pounds sterling, and if any collector of the dutys upon slaves shall directly or indirectly take or receive any bribe, [75] [1] Hening, Statutes, III. 229-235. This was renewed in 1710 for three years, and again in 1712 for two years (ibid., p. 482; IV. 30). In the same session of the assembly was passed: "An act for raising a publick revenue for the better support of the government of this her majesty colony and dominion of Virginia, and for ascertaining the sallary of the Councill. . . . And be it also further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, and it is hereby enacted, That every ship or vessell which shall at any time hereafter come into any port, creek, harbour or road within this colony and dominion, and shall be there entered in order to unlade and put on shore goods, merchandises, passengers, servants or slaves, shall pay six pence per poll for every passenger, servant, slave or other person imported in her the marriners belonging to and in actuall pay of the said ship or vessell and every one of them excepted." This was repealed in 1708 by proclamation and renewed in 1710. Ibid., III. 344-349, 490.

[2] Here follows the subject-matter of the third paragraph of the act of 1699, ante, no. 70.

recompence or reward to connive at any false entry of any negroes or slaves imported as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds sterling and be forever afterward disabled in his said office and rendered uncapable of holding any office or imployment relating to the customs in this colony and dominion, and the person or persons giving or paying such bribe or reward shall forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds sterling.

And for an encouragement to import mony into this colony and dominion,

Be it further enacted, That whatsoever person or persons shall pay any of the impositions, dutys or customs accruing due by virtue of this act in good and lawfull mony of his or their own importation into this colony and dominion to be proved by the oath of the party paying the same such person or persons shall have an abatement and allowance of ten per cent in all dutys so paid and sattisfyed, and every collector of the duties so paid is hereby authorized and required to make allowance accordingly.

And be it further enacted, That upon any entry payment or drawback where an oath is directed and injoyned by this act, the collector of the dutys where such entry or payment shall be made or drawback allowed be impowered and required and such collector is hereby impowered and required to administer the oath.

And be it further enacted, That the several impositions, dutys or customs by this act laid upon liquors and slaves be from time to time paid and sattisfyed to our sovereign lady the Queen, her heirs and successors to and for the uses, intents and purposes hereafter mentioned, and to and for no other use, intent or purpose whatsoever.

And be it further enacted, That the severall forfeitures and penaltyes which shall or may arise by virtue of this act shall be divided into three equall parts, one third part whereof shall be to our sovereign lady the Queen, her heirs and successors for and towards the better support of this government and the contingent charges thereof, one third part to the governor of this colony and dominion for the time being, to and for his own proper use and behoof, and the other third part to him or them that will informe or sue for the same, to be recovered with costs in any court of record within this colony and dominion, wherein no essoin, protection, or wager of law shall be allowed.[3] . . .

[The collectors to be appointed by the governor, to account to the treasurer, the governor, the Council and Burgesses.]

[3] The subject-matter of the fifth and sixth paragraphs of the act of 1699 follows.

And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force for two years from the said five and twentieth day of May [1706] and no longer.[4]

76. Journal of the Board of Trade, 1707.[1]

November 28, 1707.

Mr. Perry, Mr. Hide, Mr. Milner and other Virginia and Maryland merchants attending. . . .

These gentlemen being further asked what benefit or disadvantage they find in the plantations by allowing seperate traders to the coast of Africa, they said that the separate traders had furnished to the plantations above 800 negroes annually, since the passing of the late Act, and that the company had sent none to Virginia or Maryland since, nor for seaven years before, that the said negroes (such as are merchantable) are sold from 25 to 26 a head; that the separate traders have paid to the company considerably more by the ten per cent. than the said company have laid out upon their forts and fortifications; and that the said seperate traders have no protection from the said forts, but on the contrary have received all the discouragement imaginable from the company's factors there.

77. Edmund Jennings to the Board of Trade, 1708-1710.[1]

Virginia November the 27th, 1708.

May it please yr Lordships, It was the 11th of last moneth and the Fleet then sailed, before I had the honr to receive yor Lordships of the 15th of April concerning the Negro Trade Since which I have endeavoured by the means of the proper Officers, and the informations of the ancient Inhabitants, to answer Yo'r Lordps Commands, and in [4] On Dec. 21, 1705, Governor Edward Nott wrote to the Board of Trade: "I understand there hath been brought into the Country this summer about 1800 Negroes sold generally for 54 l. sterl. a Man and Woman, at the Least, all these Except a few are imported since the imposition Act Expired" (C. O. 5: 1361, p. 421). J. C. Ballagh (History of Slavery in Virginia, p. 15n.) says that the committee which was revising the Virginia laws continued the duty act of 1705 for two years. This however does not agree with Hening, according to whom the duty act expired in April, 1705, was revived in October, but was not to go into effect until the next May. This corresponds with the suggestion in Governor Nott's letter, that for a time there was no duty. For the importation in the summer of 1705 see post, no. 130. In April, 1706, the assembly was considering an act laying a duty of 20 s. to defray the cost of a house for the governor. See Journal of the House of Burgesses, 1702-1712, pp. 180, 183, 194, 195, 199, 201-203.

Jennings was president of the council of Virginia and acting governor between the death of Edward Nott in August, 1706, and the arrival of Alexander Spotswood as lieutenant governor, June 23, 1710.

Order thereto have herewith sent yo'r Lordships an account of all the Negros imported into this Colony from the 24th of June 1699 to the 12th of October last past distinguishing those imported by the Royal African Company (679), and those by Seperate Traders (5928),[2] wherein yo'r Lordships will perceive the latter have had much the greater Share. As to the particular Rates at which those Negros have been sold, they have been variable according to the Different times of their coming in and the quality and ages of the Slaves, but the medium for men and women may be reckoned from 20 to 30 pounds a head for those sold by the Company and from 20 to 35 £ a head for the like kinds sold by the Seperate Traders, who in gen'll have sold theirs at a higher rate than the Company.

How the Country was supplyed with Negros before the Trade to Affrica was laid open in the year 1698, I have endeavoured to Inform my Self from some ancient Inhabitants conversant in that Trade as well as by recollecting what hath happened in my own knowledge, and find that before the year 1680 what negros were brought to Virginia were imported generally from Barbados for it was very rare to have a Negro ship come to this Country directly from Africa since that time, and before the year 1698, the Trade of Negros became more frequent, tho not in any proportion to what it hath been of late, during which the Affrican Company sent several Ships and others by their Licence (as I have been informed) having bought their Slaves of the Company brought them in hither for Sale, Among which I remember the late Alderman Jeffrys and Sr Jeffry Jeffrys were principally concerned, but all this time the price of the Negros was currant from £18 to 25 per head for men and women and never exceeded that Rate. Whether the opening the Trade to Africa having created an Emulation between the Company and the Seperate Traders which should outbid the other in the purchase of their Slaves there, or whether the dexterity of their Factors there in taking advantage of the prevailing humour of our Inhabitants for some years past of buying Negros even beyond their abilities, or the Concurrence of both, hath raised the Rates of Negros so extravagantly I shall not pretend to determine but this I may venture to say that it will be much harder to lower the price again now 'tis raised unless there be the same Freedome of Trade continued as formerly for tho the Inhabitants of this Country in gen'll will not be so fond of purchasing Negros as of late being sensibly convinced of their Error which has in a manner ruined the Credit of the Country yet there will still be some that must, and others that will at any rate Venture to buy them, and if the Company alone have the Management of the Trade, they'l find pretences enough to keep up the price if not to impose what higher rate they please, which the buyer must submit to, knowing he cannot be supplyed by any other hand. As for Vessells trading directly from this place to the Coast of Africa I never knew of any nor is the same practicable this Country not being provided with Comoditys suitable for carrying on such a Trade. This is the best account I am able to give in answer to yor Lordships Commands wherein if I have failed or mistaken in any point I beg yo'r Lordships favourable Construction thereof Since I can with truth assure yo'r Lordships that no man hath a greater Desire to serve yo'r Lordships.[3] . . .

[2] The lists enclosed in this letter, together with all other figures on the amount of Virginia importation, have, for convenience of printing, been placed at the end of the material on Virginia, nos. 130-134. They should be used in connection with the material which precedes them.

P. S. The Instructions to our late Governour were sealed up at his death, and were not opened till I had the hon'r of being intrusted with the Government by her Majesty's late Instruction, else I should not have failed in sending yr Lordships the amount of Negros required therein.

VIRGINIA, Jany 11, 1709/10.[4]

. . . I am sorry my letter of Nov. 27 concerning the negro trade hath given your Lordps. the trouble of a new enquiry. The difference in the price of negros between the Company and the separate traders was occasioned by the dilligence of the latter in sending their ships early, and thereby gaining the advantage, once or twice, of a better market than the Company who came after them; for when negros come in about the beginning of the summer, the planters are abundantly more fond of them, and will give greater prices for them, because they are sure of the advantage of their labours in that years crop, whereas negros bought at the latter end of the year, are of little service till the next Spring, and this is the true reason of that

[3] The last sentence is not in the Calendar, the postscript is (p. 157). On the same day Jennings wrote that the number of negroes in the colony was about 12,000, an increase of "laboring tithable persons" for the past three years of 3000, chiefly the result of the importation of negroes. This number the Board of Trade might have expected to be greater when they compared it with negro importations, but he explained that in addition "to the distempers usual among new negros wch carry off not a few of them, many of our poorer sort of inhabitants daily remove into our neighbouring Colonys, especially to North Carolina". N. C. Col. Recs., 1662-1712, p. 692; B. T. Jour., 1709-1714, p. 25; Cal. St. P. Col., 1708-1709, p. 158.

[4] Cal. St. P. Col., 1710-1711, p. 4. Endorsed, "Recd. 3rd, Read 20th April, 1710". On July 27, 1709, the Board of Trade wrote to Jennings: "The accounts of negroes you have sent us will be made use of as occasion shall offer. But it came too late for the last Session of Parliament, where the African trade was under consideration. However, we have reason to beleive that the next winter that Trade will be further look'd into, and then your accounts will be of service. But there is one particular wherein we are yet in the dark, vizt., you say that the Company have sold their negroes from 20 to £30 a head, and the separate traders from 20 to £35. We wish you had explained the reason of this difference, and therefore desire you to do it the first opportunity" (ibid., 1708-1709, p. 429). In its report to the House of Commons in 1709 the board estimated the annual demand of Maryland and Virginia at 4000 negroes. See this work, II. 63.

difference of price, and not that the Company have been at all more favourable to the planters in the sale of their slaves than the separate traders, for both have sold as dear as they could. . . .

78. Lieutenant Governor Alexander Spotswood to the House of Burgesses, 1710.[1]

November 27, 1710.

. . . Wherefore give me Leave to Tell you That I fear The high Duty Intended on Negro slaves May be Interpreted as a prohibition of That Trade Which her Majesty is gratiously pleased to Countenance, as you may perceive by such her Royal Instructions which I now send you; and I hope it may not be yet too Late for you to make Some amendments That may shew you bear a Just Deference to her Majestys Most Gracious Recommendations. . . .

79. The Virginia Council to the House of Burgesses, 1710.[1]

Thursday, November 30, 1710.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Burgesses: The Council having Taken into Consideration The Bill sent up from your house for Laying a Duty on Liquors and Slaves and being Desirous to Remove all Objections which may be Made against so good a Law as well as to preserve That good Correspondence with your house, which is Necessary for The Publick Service before They proceed farther on That Bill Think fitt to acquaint you That Complaints have been frequently made By The Traders That The former Imposition Acts have not Excepted Negro Children, and others Who by Accidental Infirmitys are not to be Sold for so much as The Duty Laid on Them And also That no Drawback hath been Allowed for Negros

[78] [1] Journal of the House of Burgesses, 1702-1712, p. 281. Hening (III. 482) gives the title of an act for laying a duty on liquors and slaves, which he says agrees almost verbatim with the first chapter of the act of 1705. There was however the important difference that the earlier act laid a duty of £1, the act now under consideration and soon to be passed placed a duty of £5, on imported slaves. The bill was well advanced toward passage when Governor Spotswood sent his protest (Jour. of Burgesses, 1702-1712, pp. 271, 273, 276). On Nov. 28, 1710, "The house proceeded to Take into Consideration The Message from The Governor Relating to The high Duty on Negro Slaves in The Imposition bill, and Thereupon, Ordered That The Comittee of Propositions and Grievances (according to The Directions of this house) Make a Suitable Answer to the said Message in the Address allready ordered to be, by Them prepared". The next day the committee reported the following: "The way we have Taken for Raising of Mony by Laying a Duty on slaves And Liquors, is what this house and former Assemblys have long Since thought Least Burthensome to The people And most Agreeable to The Constitution of this Government And Wee humbly Conceive The Manner in which it is now Laid, is very much for The Service of her Majesty, and The Advantage of The people We Represent Therefore pray The Bill as it now Lyes before The Councill, may have your Honours assent" (ibid., pp. 282, 286). Alexander Spotswood was lieutenant governor of Virginia from June 23, 1710, to Sept. 27, 1722.

[79] [1] Jour. of Burgesses, 1702-1712, pp. 286-287.

Dying before Sale; Wherefore The Council propose That Your house will Consent That a Proviso be Added to the Bill: That all Such Negros as Either by Reason of Their Infancy or Any Accidental Disabillity happen to be sold for Less Than fifteen pounds shall pay no greater Duty Than one Third of What They are Sold for; and That for Negro's Dying before Sale and within Six Weeks after The Importacion a Drawback of The Whole Duty be Allowed.

And forasmuch as most of The Negros Imported from her Majestys Plantations are Either Such as are Transported for Crimes or Infected with Disseases, the Council Submit to the Consideration of Your house Whither it may not be proper That a higher Duty be Laid on Them Than on Negros Imported Directly from Africa, Allowing Still The Same Exemptions as above proposed. . . .

80. Journal of the House of Burgesses, 1710.[1]

Thursday, November 30th, 1710.

[The House] Resolved—That Leave be given to The Council to Amend The Bill for Laying a Duty on Liquors and Slaves by adding two proviso's prepared by This House on Consideration of their Message Relating to The Said Bill which Proviso's are in The Words following.

Provided allways and be it hereby Enacted That Nothing in This Act before Contained shall Extend or be Construed to Compell Importer or owner of Any Slave or Slaves into this Colony at any Time During The Continuance of This Act to pay the Duty by This Act Imposed on Slaves for any Negro or other Slave Male or female Child Which is not or shall not be at the time of Importation able to go Alone but that it shall and may be Lawfull for all Such Children to be Imported and Sold here Without paying the Duty by This Act Imposed or any part Thereof any Thing before in This Act Contained to the Contrary Notwithstanding.

Provided also That if by Virtue of This act a Duty be paid by the Importer, for any Negro or other Slave and Such Negro or Slave happen to Dye Within forty Days next after the Day of his or her Arrival into Any port of This Colony and be not Actually Sold it shall and may be Lawfull in Such a Case to and for The Collectors to whom The Said Duty shall be paid and Such Collector is hereby Required and Injoyned to allow and pay Back to The Said Importer the Duty paid for Such Negro or Slave in Case The Importer Making Demand of Such Drawback make Oath before The Said Collector That the Said Slave did Dye Within The Said forty Days and Was not Sold before his or her Death but not unless Such Oath be Made any Thing in This Act to The Contrary or seeming to the Contrary Notwithstanding.[2] . . .

81. Lieutenant Governor Alexander Spotswood to the Board of Trade, 1711.[1]

Virginia, Mch. 6th, 1710/11.

To the Lords of Trade: . . . For raising of which sum [2] and discharging sundry publick debts contracted since the last Assembly, which amounts to almost £1800, they have by another Act layed a duty on liquors and slaves for three years. The duty on liquors is the same that was laid the last Assembly; but that on slaves they have thought fitt to advance to five pounds a head, for all imported by water, and 20 s. on Indian slaves imported by land; I soon perceived that the laying so high a duty on negros was intended to discourage the importation, and therefore thought it necessary to use the arguments in my message of Nov. 27 (Journal of Assembly),[3] besides my endeavours with particular members for moderating that duty: but they urged what is really true, that the Country is already ruined by the great number of negros imported of late years; that it will be impossible for them in many years to discharge the debts already contracted for the purchase of those negros if fresh supplys be still poured in upon them while their tobacco continues so little valuable, but that the people will run more and more in debt, and must be forced to imploy their hands upon other manufactures. Whereupon finding them unanimously resolved rather to lose the Bill than to go contrary to the general inclinations of the country, I at last yeilded to pass the Act as they had prepared it after having been assured by the most considerable traders that this duty will be no discouragement to the negro trade, if tobacco becomes valuable, and on the other hand, tho' no duty were laid on negros, the country is not in a capacity to purchase any number while their tobacco is at so low a rate; and that this duty will only affect some few merchants that perhaps may import negros before they are acquainted with the circumstances of the Country, but none that are thoroughly versed in this trade. Since therefore the duty is only for three years, and that it will at least require so much time before the Country can possibly be in a condition to pay off the debts already contracted, I hope the passing this law, which is so necessary for the ease and satisfaction of H. M. subjects here, will not be disagreeable to H. M. Your Lordps will observe in the above mentioned message another exception I took against this Bill, which was, that the Virginia owners enjoyed a greater priviledge and exemption than H. M. British subjects. . . .[4]

[2] The act was approved Dec. 9, 1710 (ibid, p. 298). DuBois (Slave Trade, p. 13) is mistaken in thinking that Spotswood went so far as to veto this measure, as his letter next printed makes quite clear. The duty act of 1710 was continued in 1712 for another three years (Jour. of Burgesses, 1712-1726, pp. 32, 35, 36, 40-42; Jour. of Council, I. 550, 552-553). On Dec. 29, 1713, Spotswood wrote to the Board of Trade: "They have likewise placed a further confidence in me, by allowing me without any controul to finish the Governor's house, and by agreeing that without limiting the sum the charge thereof shal be paid out of the dutys on liquors and slaves" (Cal. St. P. Col., 1712-1714, p. 278). For earlier correspondence of Spotswood with the board see post, no. 132, n. 1. In 1714 a further measure was passed to remove the defects in the existing law (Jour. of Burgesses, 1712-1726, pp. 66, 97, 101-102, 110-112, 117; Cal. St. P. Col., 1714-1715, p. 84). Apparently no further duty was laid until 1723. Occasional petitions asked that the duty imposed by the act of 1710 be omitted. In November, 1712, Mr. Frederick Jones was allowed to bring in slaves from North Carolina duty free, as they had originally gone from Virginia. Jour. of Council, I. 541-542.

82. Instructions to the Earl of Orkney, 1715.[1]

April 15, 1715.

102. You are to give all due Encouragement and Invitation to Merchants and others who shall bring Trade to our Colony or any way contribute to the Advantage thereof and in Particular to the Royal Affrican Company.

103. And as we are willing to recommend unto the said Company that the said Colony may have a constant and sufficient Supply of Merchantable Negroes at Moderate Rates in Money or Commodities so you are to take especial Care that Payment be duly made and within a competent time according to their Agreement.

[4] This applied to that portion of the act which dealt with the duty on liquors. On Mar. 20, 1711, Spotswood again wrote to the Board of Trade: "The unhappy circumstances of the trade of this Colony oblige me to lay before your Lordp's, the ill consequences which I am apprehensive it may have on that of Great Brittain without the application of some proper and speedy remedy. The great number of negros imported here (so long as there remained any money or credit in the country to buy them) and solely imployed in making tobacco, hath produced for some years past an increase of that commodity far disproportioned to the consumption that could be made of it in all the marketts which the war had left open" (Cal. St. P. Col., 1710-1711, p. 430, printed in Va. Hist. Soc., Collections, new ser., I. 72, and VI. 11). Spotswood goes on to show that this condition is driving the people into manufacturing to supply their wants since tobacco will no longer do it. For the amount of importation which followed this act see post, no. 131.

[82] [1] Va. Mag. of Hist., XXI. 351-352. George Hamilton Douglas, Earl of Orkney, was governor of Virginia from 1697 to 1737, though during that time he never visited the colony. These instructions, with the exception of art. 105, are the same as those sent to Francis Nicholson Aug. 30, 1720, when he was appointed governor of South Carolina (C. O. 5: 400, p. 41, sects. 83-86), and are typical of those sent as a matter of routine. See those to Robert Hunter in 1707 (C. O. 5: 1362, p. 181, sects. 101-104) and to Orkney Dec. 15, 1727 (C. O. 5: 1365). In 1718 the Board of Trade directed an addition to the governors' instructions: "that they do not pass any Act which may any ways affect the trade or shipping of the Kingdom without a Clause Declaring that the said Acts shall not be in Force until they be Approv'd and Confirm'd by His Majesty". Acts P. C. C., 1680-1720, p. 721.

104. And whereas the said Company have frequently great Sums of Money owing to them in our Plantations in America, they have been much hindered in the recovery of their Just debts there, and discouraged in their Trade by too frequent Adjournments of Courts, and it being absolutely necessary that all Obstructions in the Course of Justice be effectually remov'd You are to take Care that the Courts of Justice be duly and frequently held in our Colony and Dominion under your Government, so that all our Subjects in the said Colony, and Particularly the Royal African Company may enjoy the Benefit thereof, and not receive any undue hinderance in the recovery of their Just Debts.

105. And you are to take care that there be no Trading from Virginia to any Place in Africa within the Charter of the Royal African Company otherwise than prescribed by Law.

106. And we do further expressly Command and require you to give unto us, and to our Commissioners for Trade and Plantations an Account every half Year of what Number of Negroes the said Colony is Supply'd with, that is what Number by the African Company, and what by the Seperate Traders, and at what rates Sold.

83. The Royal African Company: Minutes of the Committee of Shipping, 1720.[1]

At a Com'ee of Shipping held February 14th 1720.

Agreed with Capt. John Mitchell to freight the Ship Prince George from the port of London to Cabenda in Guinea to take in there 350 Negroes and to proceed from thence to Virginia and there to deliver her Negroes att Six pounds ten Shillings per head freight for all delivered alive and three pounds five Shillings per head dead Freight for all shipt short of the 350 and the Capt. to be subject to the usual covenants in the Companys charter partys. The Ship to be ready to take in Goods by the 20th of this Instant. And to Depart Gravesend by the 20th of March wind and weather permitting.

and was Bound for and proceeded to the Coast of Africa and had on Board no other Cargoe than what was proper for purchasing Negroes which was the Intent of the Voyage and the Negroes there purchased was to be Transported to the Collony of Virginia.

That about the 11th day of Xbr. att the Dawning of the Day in the Same Year the Said Ship in the prosecution of her Voyage being near to Old Callabar on the Coast of Guinia had the Misfortune to fall near Three Ships And a Brigantine wch proved to be all pirats one of which having Twenty Guns mounted And two hundred Men whose Commanders Name was England came up wth them, And Hoysted a black Flagg wth Death's Head in itt And Fired at the Callabar Merchant and Soon entered on Board her by force of Arms and Beat and Abused Several of the Said Ships Company and threatned to Burn the Ship with her Cargoe. And forced the Master Thomas Kenedy with the Ship and her Company to goe with them into the River of Old Callabar and whilst there the pirats fitted their Ships and Cleaned them. All which time the Master and Company of the Callabar Merchants were prisoners and the Ship in the possession of the said piratts and that the said pirats After they had fitted their Ships and Cleaned them Departed from that river forceing the Callabar Merchant to Saile with them to Cape Lopas, and from thence to the Iland of Anabona and near the Said Iland After having been Nine Weeks in the possession of the Said Pirats and their prisoners all that time Did Obtain Liberty to Depart from them and proceed on their Voyage to Virginia and at their Departure they put on Board Twenty one Negro Men wch they gave the Master as a Satisfaction for the Damage they had done him the Said Twenty one Negroes were all new Negroes for they could Speak no Europian Language.

That the Callabar Merchant was fitted with Stores And of Burden and Accomodations And also had Sufficient Cargoe to have purchased upwards of Three Hundred Slaves had She escaped falling into the hands of these pirats who took away and distroyed whilst they had the possession of the Said Ship the Following Goods (Vizt.).

One Hundred and Thirteen Copper Barrs, Six Iron Barrs, Six peaces of photas,[2] Twelve peaces of large Topseals, Twenty four peaces of romalls, Thirty peaces of Cuthleas, Ninty ps. of Brawles, four hundred forty five Bunches of Beads, Between three and four hundred weight of Nailes, Between four and five hundred weight of pewter, one hundred and four Laced Hatts, Seven plain Hatts, Ten Barrells of powder, one hundred and Eleven Tradeing Guns and Several other Goods damaged.

[2] Photas or photees, East India cottons, romalls, sometimes called sea-handkerchiefs, cuthless or cushlaes, probably coarse cotton cloth. These and many similar goods are frequently referred to in volumes I. and II. of this work.

And Also of the Ships Stores three ps. of Canvas, Six Casks of Beef and porke, two butts of Bread, Ten Anchors of French Brandy, three West India Barrels of Bottled Beer, Sixty Platform planks, Six Quoils of New Cordage, Two Firkins of Butter, and Fifteen Cheeses with all the Ships other Stores Except a Hundred of Bread and a Barrell of Bull Beef the Water and Negroes provision.

That We being forced from the Coast as Aforesaid And with but one half of our Compliment of Slaves (Vizt.) one hundred and Sixty, Thirty Six of which Dyed at Sea and Virginia Whereof this Deponent verily believes Twenty of them dyed partly and through the Ill useage they had from the pirats and by the want of provision at Sea, And the Superfluity After they arrived at Virginia, Also that the Slaves Brought into Virginia was for Want of Provision So Maugre that the price was much Diminished.

There was Also lost at Callabar and Cape Lopas Three Slaves which was Occasioned by not keeping a Strict Watch as Usual which was out of our power to do being so Harrassed And always under the Command of the Said pirats, And this Deponent further Saith that he had taken from him by the said pirats In wearing Apparrel to the Value of Seven pounds Ten Shillings.

My Lords: . . .[4] There have also been bro't in hither last Month in the Ship Callabar Merchant of Bristol, Tho. Kennedy, M'r, one and twenty Negro Slaves, wch he delivered up to me as Piratical Effects, and upon wch I am to wait his Majesty's Commands. These Slaves were given to Capt. Kennedy by one Edward England, Commdr. of a Pirate Ship by whom Kennedy was taken on the Coast of Guinea last Winter and as the Pirats had detained him for some months and plundered him of sundry Goods, they pretended to give him these Negroes in recompense for his Losses. When Masters of [4] Earlier in this letter Spotswood wrote of the capture of pirates who had the previous year been on the coast of Guinea, and who had in their possession when captured three negro men and a boy. The next year Spotswood wrote to the board of a Spanish privateer which had ravaged the Virginia coast. On Spotswood's protest all the prizes captured had been returned save a London sloop bringing negroes to Virginia, "Yet he would by no means part wth the Sloop wth the Negroes, wch was more valuable than both the others, but alledged that that Sloop was a lawfull Prize for having Redwood on Board, wch he said was the Growth of the Spanish Plantations, tho it was evident the same was brought from the Coast of Africa". Ibid., p. 347.

Ships are so honest as to discover and Yield up what is thus given them in lieu of their own private losses, I cannot but recommend them to his Maj'ty's favour that some consideration may be had of their sufferings and damages. . . . And seeing Capt. Kennedy has in like manner acted so just a part in delivering up the Negroes given him by the Pirates, in consideration of the damages he and his Owners had sustained by their Means, I beg leave to recommend him, also, to Yo'r Lord'ps assistance for obtaining Reparation out of the produce of the Slaves he has thus delivered up to his Maj'ty's use.[5] . . .

The Case of Francis Stevens, Abel Grant, Tho. Melton, Samll. Allen and Samll. Fry, Merchants and Owners of the Ship "Callabar-Merchant" of Bristol.[6]

[March 22, 1721.]

That the said Ship the Callabar Mercht. was fitted out of Bristol in the month of Sept. 1719, with a Cargo proper for purchasing Negroes and no other, And also provision for the said Ship's Company and no more than a Sufficiency for the Voyage.

That the Master Thos. Kenedy was sent with the same from Bristol to Guinea with no other Intent than to purchase Negroes there, and from thence to transport them to the Collony of Virginia.

That being on the Coast of Guinea and near old Callabar, on the 11th Xbr. in the same year At the Dawning of Day, the said Ship fell near to three Ships and a Brigantine, wch weere all Pyrates, One of the Ships whose Commanders Name was England, came up with the Callabar Merchant, and the said Pyrate Ship hoisted a Black Flag, with Death's Head, and firing at the sd Callabar Merchant, soon enter'd on board her, beat and abused the said Master and his Men, and kept them as Prisoners for Nine Weeks, in which time they made use of, destroyed and took away great part of the said Ship's Cargoe, Provision, and Stores, and often threatening them to burn the said Ship, but at length the Master Kennedy obtained Liberty to depart from them with his Ship to proceed on his Voyage to Virginia, and at their parting with him, they put on board and gave him the said Kennedy Twenty one Negroe Men as a Satisfaction for the Damage they had done him.

[5] In a letter written on the same day to Secretary Craggs, Spotswood adds that he is keeping the negroes till he receives his Majesty's commands or application from their owners. Va. Hist. Soc., Collections, II. 343.

[6] C. O. 5: 1319, pp. 39, 41. On Mar. 28, 1721, Lord Carteret sent to the Lords of Trade and Plantations a letter on this subject, enclosing Spotswood's statement (C. O. 5: 1319, p. 9). Endorsed: "Mem'dm The Original return'd to the Treasury." Captain Kennedy made affidavit to the facts here related on Nov. 14, 1720 (C. O. 5: 1319, p. 39). Abel Grant was master of the Society of Merchant Venturers in 1729.

As soon as arrived at Virginia, the Master Kennedy acquainted the Honble. Alex. Spotswood Esq. Govr. thereof; W[h]o seized the said Negroes for his Majesty's use, and have only allowed for the same One Hundred and Twenty Six pounds, which is not one fourth part of the Value, Notwithstanding the Damage sustained by the said owners of the said Ship, occasion'd by the said Pyrates, amounts at least to twelve hundred pound Sterling, as per Affidavit, is made to appear.[7]

[Journal of the Board of Trade.][8]

WHITEHALL, March 28, 1721.

Mr. Erle, Member of Parliament for Bristol, attending with Mr. Francis Stevens, and desiring the Board to take into consideration the case of the said Stevens and others merchants and owners of the ship Callabar Merchant of Bristol, which was lately plundered by pirates on the coast of Africa, and brought some negroes to Virginia, given by the said pirates to the master of the said ship, in lieu of great part of her cargoe, so plundered; the said negroes being seized there for His Majesty by order of Colonel Spotswood, Lieut. Governor of that colony; a letter from Mr. Charles Stanhope, dated the 22nd instant, signifying the desire of the Lords of the Treasury that this Board would give them their opinion on the said case, was read; together with the case itself; as also the affidavits of the master and chief mate of the ship in proof of the facts set forth in the said case; and their Lordships observing to Mr. Erle and Mr. Stevens, that the negroes, which the owners of the said ship desire to have restored, or the value of them, may possibly be claimed by persons who were robbed of them by these pirates; Mr. Erle thereupon said, that security should be given to answer any Legal claim on that account if His Majesty should be graciously pleased to bestow the said negroes, or value of them, on the owners of the said ship and others concernd therein.

A Letter from the Lord Carteret of this day, referring to the Board an extract of a letter from Colonel Spotswood, Lieut. Governor of Virginia, in favour of Captain Kennedy, Commander of the said ship Callabar Merchant, was read; and their Lordships gave some directions for preparing a letter to the Treasury, relating to the case of the owners of the said ship.[9] [7] This statement the owners sent to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, asking that Spotswood be instructed to deliver the negroes to them, or to find some other satisfaction for their losses. C. O. 5: 1319, p. 41.

[9] In accordance with directions given by the board, William Popple, on Mar. 31, communicated to Charles Stanhope, one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, the judgment of the board that if the owners of the Callabar Merchant would give security to answer for any legal claim which might be made for the negroes the board saw no objections to the satisfaction they asked being granted to them (C. O. 391: 30, p. 89, C. O. 5: 1365, pp. 227-228; Cal. Treas. Papers, 1720-1728, p. 52). The warrant carrying out this judgment was signed May 15.

Gent'n, My Last was the 19th instant to which refer. Little since done. I am in hopes to make the Greyhound a full Shipp of tob'o, and if weather proves good I hope she will leave us abt. the Last of Next Month. what Slaves wee have left goes of Slow and dull, yett am in hopes to gett Clear of them before the Ship Sailes.

Gov. Spotswood has sent in his Sloop to my Landing abt. 20 tonn of Iron to frtt. to Bristoll, he made an offer to shipp in the Greyhound what she would take in, which by Consent of Capt. Holden wee have agreed to discharge our ballace and take as much Iron as is Sufficient for the Shipp, the price is 7/6 per Tonn, which is 2/6 more than he has given to any of the Londoners this year. I thott this may be agreeable since its brott to the Shipp Side and no trouble therewith and the Iron very handy, and there can be (now) noe danger in Stowing tob'o in our ground tear, otherwise the guiney ballace woud prove injurious to the tob'o. I shant inlarge, but shall Use my indeav'rs for the dispatch of your Shipp, and am with Sincere respects.

[88] [1] Jefferies MSS., p. 75.

[89] [1] C. O. 5: 1319, p. 265. On May 30, 1723, the governor informed the council that he understood that the Burgesses were planning to lay a duty upon slaves. For 40/ per head Duty on Negroes.[2] This I presume the African Company will Oppose, and Not knowing but the Seperate Traders might Likewise Join In such Opposition made Me think this Notice the more Necessary.

They sett forth In their Law Abundance of good Uses the Money raised by these Impositions have been putt to, but If they would Likewise sett forth how much the Burgesses have Made Use of to pay themselves in Money they would find the Summ amount to Near or Upwards of £4000 for three Sessions of Assembly last past which Must Surely be thought very Ridiculous, nay this very Assembly, to pay themselves In Money have Broke Into a fund (as I think) appropriated for Bounties to those that Manufactured hemp and Tarr, so that If this Law passes the Money which will Arrise thereby must for a long time go to supply those funds which the Burgesses have Broke Into, for no reason that I know of, but because they think Money better pay than Tobacco.

their information he sent his Majesty's instructions of Sept. 27, 1717, relating to the passage of acts "affecting the Trade and Shipping of Great Brittain", with the request that the council transmit them to the House of Burgesses (Ex. Jour. of Col. Va., IV. 40). Richard Harris, to whom this letter was written, was a separate trader frequently called to testify before the Board of Trade. In a letter of Sept. 23, 1723, he puts forward a Virginia argument against the act here under consideration. C. O. 5: 1319, p. 255.

[2] See Jour. of Burgesses, 1712-1726, pp. 379-384, 395; Hening, IV. 118. The governor's assent to the act was given June 20. DuBois, who describes this act as imposing a "prohibitive" duty, writes of it as the beginning of a series designed to "check the slave trade", a purpose certainly not hinted at by the writer of this letter (Slave Trade, pp. 12-13, 213). The duty was lower than that in operation between 1710 and 1718, which was scarcely "prohibitive".

[3] C. O. 391: 32, pp. 214-217; B. T. Jour., 1722/3-1728, p. 50. Those opposed to the act just passed lost no time in making their objections known. On Aug. 28 the Court of Assistants of the African Company directed the secretary to ask for a hearing before the Board of Trade (T 70: 124; C. O. 5: 1319, p. 251). On Nov. 12 the board, after reading a letter on the subject from Mr. Lynn of the company, set a date for a hearing and requested the attendance of Lynn, Harris, and Le Heup. C. [4] Micajah Perry the younger. Peter Le Heup (or Leheup) was agent for Virginia and later for Barbados; Miles Carey was a Bristol merchant with extensive Virginia trade. William Bryd, jr., at the time of his father's death in 1704, had returned to Virginia after a prolonged sojourn in England. Here he took over not only the management of the extensive Virginia property accumulated by William Byrd the elder, but also his father's public offices. About 1715 he returned to England, and in 1720 he was asked by Virginia to act as its London agent. Byrd's business training had been received in the office of Perry and Lane, who were thoroughly conversant with Virginia conditions. He had already appeared before the Board of Trade, and had also served as a member of the Virginia council. J. S. Bassett, Writings of William Byrd, p. xliv ff.

ginia, the last Session there, Entituled an Act to lay a Duty on Liquors and Slaves, the said Act was read, And their Lordsps after some Discourse with them thereupon, desir'd to know what Objections the said Company had thereto, Whereupon Mr. Tryon acquainted their Lordps in behalf of the Company, that they apprehended the Duties laid by this Act wou'd tend greatly to the Discouragement of the British Trade, but chiefly to the Slave Trade. That he cou'd not conceive this Act cou'd be in any ways beneficial even to the Colony of Virginia, as it had pass'd the Assembly but by a Majority of One or Two at most. That as no Negro cou'd be landed before the Duty laid by this Act was paid, he thought it a great Hardship, Since it frequently happen'd that in 300 Negroes imported 40 or 50 were not worth 5£ per Head, and that therefore he thought it wou'd have been more advisable to have laid this Duty on the Gross Sale, In answer to which Mr. Le Heup said, that as there had formerly been Acts pass'd which laid a Duty of 5£ per Head on Negroes, which was levied in like manner as prescrib'd by this Act, And as there had been no Objections made thereto, he cou'd not imagine there cou'd be any Reason to complain of the present Duty, which does not amount to half that Sum, And as the Colony of Virginia had expended most of their Money in promoting the Manufacture of Naval Stores upon the Incouragement of the Act of Parliament lately pass'd here Entituled An Act giving further Encouragement for the Importation of Naval Stores and for other purposes therein mention'd, it wou'd be very hard not to allow them leave to raise Mony after this way to supply their Deficiencies, and therefore he desir'd their Lordsps wou'd please to recommend this Act to His Maj'ty for His Royal Confirmation; Their Lord'ps then acquainted the said Company, that if they had any further objections to make thereto, they were ready to receive them. These Gentlemen being withdrawn, Order'd that the said Act be sent to Mr. West for his Opinion thereupon in point of Law.[5]

The Memorial of Divers Merchants, Trading to Africa and Virginia Humbly offer'd to the Right Honble. the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations.[6]

Your Memorialists being Informed that there hath been lately an Act passed in Virginia and now lying before your Lordships for laying a Duty of forty Shillings per head to be paid by the Importer on all Negroes brought to that Colony after March next.

Your said Memorialists therefore in Duty to their Country as well as to this Honourable Board do Humbly pray leave to lay before your Lordships the great Mischeif that this Law if Confirmed here, will not only Occasion to the Trade and Navigation of great Brittain, but will greatly Tend also to the Lessening of the Revenue arising from the Importation of Tobacco into this Kingdom.

[5] Alured Popple to West, C. O. 5: 1365, p. 258; B. T. Jour., 1722/3-1728, p. 50.
[6] C. O. 5: 1319, p. 130.

By the Experience of all times it's Manifest that high Dutys or Impositions on any Commodity or Merchandize Naturally becomes a great Discouragement thereto and Lessens the Importation thereof.

Lessening or otherwise Discourageing the Importation of Negroes by the Dearness thereof into any of our Collonies, doth Consequently lessen the raising or Increasing its productions which in Virginia is Chiefly Tobacco.

The Less the Quantity of Tobacco raised, the Less our Navigation must needs be to Fetch it to Markett, and as the said Quantity Imported becomes less, so Consequently the Customs on the same and the Revenue arising thereby must be greatly dim[in]ished in proportion thereto.

The Less of any Commodity comes to Markett the Dearer 'twill always be, so as such Comodity by reason thereof may be in Danger of falling into the hands of our Rivall Neighbours, who can sell the same cheaper at foreign Marketts then we do, and nothing hath hitherto preserved our Tobacco Trade to us in the Marketts abroad, but the Cheapness thereof, and by our being able to undersell all other our Rivalls in that Trade.

Your Memorialists further Represent that this duty is laid in the most Burthensome manner possible, being on the Importer, who is obliged to pay the said Duty without any hopes of advantage in Respect thereto, on the Sale of his Negroes, forasmuch as they must be sold on their first Arrivall for whatever the planter will give for them, or else the Charge of keeping them will quickly eat out their Value, without any regard being had by the Buyer to any Duty or Imposition paid by the Importer.

Which Duty if taken in respect to the Navigation will appear to amount to between four and five pounds per Tonn on all Brittish Ships employed in carrying Negroes to Virginia, but if taken in respect to the Value of the Cargoes of Goods sent in them to purchase their Respective Loadings, then this Duty will appear to be above forty per Cent on their said Cargoes, most of wch consists almost wholy of our Woollen and other Brittish Manufactures, as may appear by the sev'll Instances underneath, wch will be in Effect a prohibition of the Negroe Trade to Virginia, as hath been the Case already in respect to Maryland, by reason of this Duty having been layd there,[7] and wch was the Case formerly in Virginia when a high Duty was then in being.

There is no Instance of any other Nation suffering their Colonies to lay what Duties they please on the Trade of their Mother Countrys, nor was ever a Duty so high as this in Question, ever Attempted to be laid on us by any Nation in Amity with us on any Branch of our Trade or Navigation, much less is it to be endured from our Colonies for whose preservation and in whose Protection this Nation hath been at so great Expences in the late Warrs and at all other times.

But if our Colonies are thus Suffer'd or but Connived at, in laying their Impositions on any one Branch of our Trade, 'twill scarce end there, but 'twill become a president for them (and one Colony will also take Example by another) to go on laying their dutys from one thing to another, 'till they have Loaded all Trade in generall, for wch there will never be wanting specious pretences for their so doing, It being an easy thing to perswade an Assembly to lay any Duty wch may Affect England only or any body, but themselves.

The Legislature in order to Encourage the Exporting of all Goods as well as our own Manufactures having by Divers Acts of Parliament not only granted Drawbacks of the Customs paid Inward, but having taken off all Dutys on the Exports of Goods outwards, 'tis humbly hoped your Lordships will never suffer our Colonies to Load our Trade afresh in this manner, with such Unsupportable Duties as this on Negroes would be if Confirmed here.

The African Trade having been for divers Years past under great Discouragements by the many and great Losses sustained by Pirates whereby the Premiums for Assurance are become higher then during the late Warr, besides many other great and Necessary Charges the Adventurers are lyable to, they cannot therefore support the Load of any new duties or Expences whatever be they never so small.

'Tis true any Colony m[a]y very Lawfully lay a Duty among themselves not Injurious to the Trade of their Mother Country, and this on Negroes might have been so to, If instead of forty Shillings per head to be paid by the Importer, this Duty had been but two Shillings and Six pence payable on all Negroes in possession of the planters, in which case perhaps that Method would produce much more Money If 'tis wanted then the Duty now in Question, thô your Memorialists are Informed there is no occasion for this duty in regard the Publick Treasury in Virginia hath sufficient in Cash to supply the Uses which this Act is pretended to be for.

Your Memorialists humbly pray leave further to represent that this Duty will undoubtedly tend to the great discouragemt. of the Improving and Importing Hemp and all other Navall Stores from that Colony into this Kingdom, by making the Hands dear and scarce, wch are so Necessary for raising the same and wch otherwise seems to be in a very Prosperous Method of Succeeding.

In Short this act is Calculated for preventing the Increase of the Growth of Tobacco and to discourage all small Freeholders who have but few hands, from Furnishing themselves with more, that being the Interest of the great Planters who have passed this Law, so as thereby the Less Tobacco being made by the former, that which is made by the Latter who are well furnished with Hands would sell so much the Dearer at Markett, But sure that can never be the Interest of Great Brittain and the Navigation belonging thereto.

But this Act being made in Direct Contradiction to, and Contrary to the meaning of his Majesties Order in Councill of 31 July 1717,[8] Whereby all Governours in America are directly forbid in Express words to pass any Act which may any ways Affect the Trade and shiping of this Kingdom, and whereas by the Preamble of the said Act, the reasons sett forth for passing the same are if duely Considered both Weak and Frivolous.

For these and many other Reasons Your Memorialists therefore Do Humbly hope Your Lordships will not think fitt that this Act ought to be Confirmed here.

A Computation under Different distinctions in what manner and proportion the Duty of forty Shillings per head on Negroes to be imported into Virginia after March next will affect the Negroe Trade in that Colony.[10]

A Ship of one hundred Tonns usually carrys two hundred Negroes, the duty whereof being forty Shillings per head is four hundred Pounds which amounts to four pounds per Tonn on the Tunnage of the Ship.

The Cargoe for purchasing two hundred Calabarr Negroes being one of the sorts usually carried to Virginia commonly amounts to about one Thousand Pounds the Duty of Forty Shillings per head to be paid on the said Negroes being four hundred Pounds is an Imposition of forty per Cent on the said Cargoe.

[8] Acts P. C. C., II. 721.

[9] Endorsed: "Recd Read Dec. 5th 1723." This memorial was presented to the board by Harris and Chamberlain, who were told that no action would be taken until there had been further hearings. On Dec. 10 West reported to the board that the bill under consideration imposed a duty of 40 s. on every negro imported into Virginia, leaving it to the board to decide whether this imposed a burden on the African trade. C. O. 391: 32, pp. 235-236; 5: 1319, p. 285.

[10] C. O. 5: 1319, p. 132. This was probably submitted to the board in connection with the memorial which precedes it. B. T. Jour., 1722/3-1728, pp. 62, 64-66.

But if taken in respect to the Gross sales of a Ships Loading of Negroes inclusive of Freight, Assurance, Commission and all other Charges this Duty of forty shillings per head does amount to fourteen per Cent on the whole according to the sales of the last ships Negroes sold in Virginia wch being reduced to Sterling came out at fifteen Pounds five Shillings per head.

Or if this duty be taken on the Sales of the Neagroes after deducting from the said fifteen Pounds five Shillings, the Charges of Assurance, Commission and Contingencys thereon wch come to Twenty Seven Pounds per Cent, and wch are always first paid, then this duty of forty Shillings per head does amount to Twenty four per Cent on the remainder or thereabout being Eleven Pounds five Shillings and so in proportion to the whole Adventure including Freight and all proffitts thereon.

But in Case a Man was to hire a Ship and pay the Usuall Freight being about seven Pounds per head, and also this duty of forty shillings per head, and deducting the same there remains but two Pounds five Shillings clear of charges for each Negroe, wch Cost from five to Six pounds per head, and often much more on the Coast of Affrica besides Mortality in the Voyage.

So as this duty being taken every way or any way does appear to be an unreasonable and an insupportable Burthen on the Negroe Trade to Virginia and is in a manner a prohibition thereof.

And 'Tis not long since we have been enabled to gett ridd of the great oppression the Sweeds were laying upon us in respect to Pitch and Tarr, by our Importing those two Comoditys from our own Colonies, the Success whereof depending upon the Number of Hands, If we make them dear there will quickly be an end of the great Benefitt thereby to this Kingdom.[11]

To The Right Honble. The Lords Commrs. of Trade and Plantations. The Humble Petition of The Merchants of the City of Bristol Trading to Affrica.[12]

Sheweth, That since the Trade to Affrica have been free and open, it have been very much Enlarged and Improv'd, and the Several Plantations have been better supplied with Negroes to the great advantage of the Trade and Revenue of this Kingdom.

That The Assembly of Virginia have lately made a Law for Laying a Duty of Forty Shillings per Head on all Negroes to be Imported there after March next, to be paid by the Importer, which if Confirmed here, will much prejudice the Affrica Trade and consequently the Importation of Tobacco, and the Navigation of this Kingdom.

[11] Endorsed: "Recd Read Dec. 5, 1723."
[12] C. O. 5: 1319, p. 140.

This Duty if [it] shou'd take place being in Effect a Prohibition of Negroes into that Colony, as hath been fully set forth in the Computation laid before Yo'r Lordships by the Merchants of London.

Yo'r Petitioners Therefore humbly pray Yo'r Lordships will Discountenance such proceedings and not suffer a Law so pernicious to the Trade of this Kingdom, to be Confirmed, as likewise to prevent the like Practice in any other of the Colonies abroad. . . .

The Right Honble. the Lords Commissrs. for Trade and Plantacions, The Humble Memorial of Several Merchants of London Trading to Virginia and others,[14]

Sheweth, That there is a Bill lately passed in Virginia for laying a Duty upon Liquors and forty shillings per head upon Slaves which your Mem'lsts hope will meet with his Maj'ties Royall Approbation and humbly offer the following reasons for it which Yo'r Mem'lsts believe will answer all objections to it.

That the Colony of Virginia is in very great want of new Supplys having laid out all the funds they had before raised in Matters very much conducing to the Honour and Safety of that Government and particularly large Summs in Settling two new frontier Countrys in Virginia for bringing up Navall Stores and by having also by an Act of Assembly proposed severall Considerable Rewards for the Cultivating Navall Stores in Virginia which still subsist.

That this is no New Duty for that for twenty years togeather they have raised their funds in Virginia in this manner and particularly by the two last Bills of the same Nature (Sometime since Expired) have raised five pounds a head upon Negroes which Duty of five pounds a head was not objected to, nor has (that we know of) been of any bad Consequence to any Trade whatsoever.

[14] C. O. 5: 1319, p. 142. The new counties referred to below were Spotsylvania and Brunswick.

That this Duty of forty Shillings per head being so much less than the other and not large, in proportion to the Vallue Negroes sell for there, will not discourage the Purchasers nor the Importation therefore of them, the Virginians being always ready to buy Slaves when they have money.

That this Duty therefore will not be any prejudice to the Traders in this Commodity (as they may perhaps mistake it) by reason it is the Purchaser in this Case as in all others that pays the Duty where it is not Excessive.

That this Duty being entirely drawn back upon the Reexportation or upon Slaves that dye within a certain time it will not prejudice our navigation.

That in Maryland which is under a Lord Proprietor the same Duty of forty shillings per head is raised on Negroes and that the Trade of Virginia being Exactly of the same Nature as Marylands (which is not the case of other Colonys) It would therefore seem hard they should not meet with the same Indulgence.

That Tobacco the staple Commodity of Virginia is so heavily taxed here and there already as that it cannot possibly bear a further Duty.

Wherefore Yo'r Mem'lsts humbly hope this Bill may meet with Yo'r Lordships Concurrence and his Maj'ties Assent.

Mr. Chamberlaine, Mr. Morris, Mr. Harris, Mr. Carey, Capt. Bouchaur and Mr. Merriweather in behalf of themselves and others, Merchants of London and Bristol, attending according to appointment as also Mr. Le Heup Agent for Virginia Mr. Perry, Mr. Byrd and Mr. Bradley in relation to an Act pass'd at Virginia in 1723 entitul'd an Act for laying a duty on Liquors and Slaves. The several Letters and Memorials mentioned in the Minutes of 12th Novr. 5th Dec. last and 7th of this month were again read and considered, And a Letter from Mr. Lynn, Secry to the Royal African Company being read, in relation to the said Company's Intentions not to appear any more concerning the said Act, Mr. Morris in behalf of the African Traders, represented to their Lordships that he conceiv'd the Duty laid by this Act upon the importation of Negroes did very much affect the Trade and Shipping of Great Britain, being to be paid by the Importer. And considering that the prime Cost of Negroes upon the coast of Africa was 4, 5, or 6£ per Head the duty of 40 shgs. added to their prime Cost of £4 a Head would amount to 50 per cent, at £5 prime Cost to 40 percent at £6 prime Cost to £33. 6. 8. and so on in the like proportion. That he took this Duty to be so great a Burthen upon Trade that it amounted to a Prohibition.

[15] Endorsed: "Received Jan'ry 9th Read Do 1723/4."

[16] C. O. 391: 33, pp. 11-19; B. T. Jour., 1722/3-1728, pp. 64-66. After the reading of the Bristol memorial on Jan. 7 Mr. Le Heup, Mr. Carey, Mr. Harris, and as many of the Bristol merchants as possible were asked to attend the board meeting to consider the act. When they appeared on Jan. 10 they asked a postponement of the hearing as Mr. Byrd, best able to speak on the Virginia trade, was not present. C. O. 391: 33, pp. 1-2, 10-11.

Mr. Merriweather in behalf of the Bristol Merchants confirmed what Mr. Morris had said before.

Mr. Harris, who also appeared against the Act then observed upon the London Merchants Memorial in behalf of the Act, mentioned in the Minutes of the 9th inst. viz. That he thought it very great Hardship that the Merchants in Great Britain should be obliged to pay Duties to support their Funds there. And he thought that the Duties at present laid upon the Importation of Negroes was a greater Discouragement to the Planter and Cultivators there, than the Rewards proposed by the Assembly could be an encouragement. That since the duty of 40 shill. a head on Negroes had been established in Maryland he had not heard of any one British Ship that had been sent there with Negroes.

Mr. Carey who also appeared against the said Act, further observed upon what the said Merchants represented in their Memorial in relation to the Funds of that Colony being exhausted and to its being recited in the preamble of the aforesaid Act the Want the said Colony is in for Arms and Ammunition. That he had received certain Information from thence, that the old Treasurer had transferred to the New One Seven Thousand Pounds in Money, and that they had Twelve Hundred small arms always ready, and that he had lately shipt by order from Virginia an Armourer to take care of them.

Mr. Le Heup Agent for the Colony desired their Lordsps wou'd be pleas'd to report the said Act as fit for His Maje'tys Royal Confirmation because as the Colony had given £10 per Ton on Hemp as an encouragement for the planting and improving of Naval Stores, they had no other way to raise the said mony than by laying a duty on the importation of Negroes. That he did not conceive this duty could in any way affect the Trade and Shipping of Great Britain, because it must be the purchaser in the end that pays the duty. That this was no new duty and consequently, ought not to be complain'd of, since there had been Three Acts pass'd in Virginia that had continued in Force for eight Years from 1710 to 1718 which laid a Duty of £5 per Head on the Importation of Negroes.[17] That there never had been any Opposition made to the said Acts and that considering the said Duty was much greater than [that] at present complained of and that there were more Negroes imported into Virginia in those years when the Duties were so much higher than at any time before or since, he could not conceive with what Reason either the London or Bristol Merchants cou'd complain of the Act in question. He further offer'd as a proof of the Increase of the Importation of Negroes in the above said term of years that the Duty collected upon that Account amounted to upwards of £15,000.

Mr. Byrd then said that tho' the Importer pays down the Duty he is sufficiently reimbursed by the Buyer because what he pays down is that Country Mony and what he receives is Sterling which Country Mony is at 10 or 15 pr Ct. Discount, so that he could not see that the Merchant had any Reason to complain.

Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Harris then said in behalf of the Merchants who appear'd against the said Act, That they shou'd have no further Objection to it, provided it cou'd be made to appear that the Duty was to be paid by the planter—and Mr. Merriweather acquainted their Lordships in answer to what Mr. Leheup had said in relation to the Number of Negroes imported at the time that the Duties were high, that he believ'd at present there were about 15 or 1600 Negroes imported Yearly into Virginia by the Bristol and London Merchants, That the Bristol Merchants annually sent about 800. And Mr. Harris said the Merchants of London sent thither as many. He further said that an annual supply of 1500 Negroes was wanted in Virginia which was not contradicted by the Agent or the Gentlemen who appeared in behalf of the Act.

And Mr. Carey said that he believ'd if the Act was confirm'd and even supposing the Duty (as had been alleg'd) was to be paid by the Buyer it would chiefly tend to the Ruin of the Poorer planters because they cou'd not then be able to buy a sufficient Number of Negroes to cultivate their Plantations. And that as to the Two New Counties, for the Improvement of which the King had been Graciously pleased to remit the payment of any Quit Rents for Seven Years, he was so fully persuaded that the confirming of this Act wou'd be a great Hindrance to the planting the same that he having a considerable Quantity of Land there, which required many Negroes to cultivate the same, he shou'd not buy one if the said Act was confirmed.

[17] Of the duty acts between 1710 and 1718 to which Le Heup here refers Hening gives but two, those of October, 1710, and October, 1712. Hening, III. 482, IV. 30.

Mr. Harris then observed to the Board that there had been an Instruction sent to the Governor of Virginia, not to pass any Act which might affect the Trade or Shipping of Great Britain and referr'd it to their Lordsps, how far the said Act might interfere therewith.

To the Right Honoble. the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantation.

The Humble Petition of the Mayor Aldermen and Merchants of the ancient and loyall Corporation and port of Liverpoole in the County of Lancaster, Traders to Guinea, Virginia and other his Maj'ties forreign Plantations,[18]

Shews, That Your petitioners are inform'd that the Governour Councill and Assembly of Virginia have by an Act of Assembly or Law made in Virginia laid a Duty of fourty Shillings a Head on all Negroes imported into their province, which hath been transmitted thence for his Maj'ties Approbation, and which seems very much to prejudice the Trade of this port and indeed trade in generall and greatly discourageing to your petitioners.

Your petitioners therefore most humbly pray your Honours Consideration of the premisses and that you will please to Recommend in your Report to his Maj'tie that the same may not be Confirm'd by his Maj'tie, or that your petitioners may receive such other releife as to his Maj'ties Wisdom shall seem meet.

VIRGINIA

To the King's most Excell. Ma'ty

May it please your Majesty, Having lately had under Our Consideration An Act pass'd in your Majesty's Colony of Virginia in 1723 Entitul'd An Act for laying a Duty on Liquors and Slaves, We have had the Opinion of Mr. West one of your Majesty's Counsel thereupon, and have likewise been attended by sev'l Merchants of London Bristol and Liverpool trading to Virginia in Negroes who complain against the said Act as laying a heavy Duty on the Trade and Shipping of Great Britain, We have also been attended by the Agent for the said Colony and several others in Behalf of the said Act, Upon which Occasion We humbly beg leave to represent to your Ma'ty that it appears to Us that there was formerly a Duty of five Pounds per Head laid on all Negroes imported into Virginia by three several Acts which continued in Force for eight Years from 1710 to 1718, And tho' We do not find that any considerable Objections were made at that time to the said Acts yet we must observe that by the Price the Negroes then bore, and by the smallness of the Number that was imported in those Years in Proportion to what have been imported since those Acts expir'd, and the Numbers that are necessarily wanted annually in that Colony this Duty must have been a great Hindrance to the Negroe Trade as well as a Burthen upon the poorer Planters; And tho' the Duty laid by this Act is much less than the former, We are apprehensive the same must be attended with some ill Consequences at this time, and will discourage the planting and cultivating Naval Stores especially in the two new Counties where great Numbers of Negroes will be wanting, and where your Majesty has been graciously pleas'd to remit the Payment of any Quit Rent for seven Years to encourage the settling and planting the same.

For these Reasons and considering this Duty is laid on the Importer by which the Trade of Great Britain will be affected, and there being no Clause inserted therein (pursuant to your Majesty's Instructions) to suspend its taking Effect till your Majesty's Pleasure shall be known thereupon, and that it does not appear to Us that the Colony has any immediate Occasion of Supplies We do not apprehend it can receive any Damage by the Repeal of the aforesaid Act since the Assembly may have time to pass a new Law not liable to the said Objections to raise the necessary Supplies for which this Act

At the Councill Chamber WHITEHALL

Present: Lord President, Earl of Westmoreland, Lord Viscot. Townshend, Lord Bp. of London, Lord Carteret, Mr. Walpole Master of the Rolls.

By a Committee of the Lords of His Majestys Most Honourable Privy Councill.

In Obedience to an order in Councill of the 21th of February last, Referring to this Committee a Representation from the Lords Commissrs. of Trade and Plantations, relating to Yo'r Majestys' Disallowance of an Act passed in the Colony of Virginia in 1723, intituled, "An Act for laying a Duty on Liquors and Slaves", Their Lordships this day took the same into Consideration, and do find that Three Acts of the like Kind were formerly past in that Colony Laying a Duty of 5 li per Head on all Negroes imported there which Duty Continued from the Years 1710 to 1718; and tho' no Considerable objections were made at that time to the said Acts, yet it appears that by the price the Negroes then bore and by the Smallness of the Number that were imported in those Years, in proportion to what have been imported since those Acts Expired, and the Numbers that are necessarily wanted annually in that Colony, this Duty must have been a great hindrance to the Negro Trade as well as a Burthen upon the Poorer Planters; And although the Duty laid by this Act is much less than the former; The same must be attended with ill Consequences at this time, and Discourage the Planting and Cultivating Naval Stores, especially in the Two New Counties where great Numbers of Negroes will be wanting, and where Your Majesty hath been pleased to Remitt the Payment of any Quitt Rent for Seven Years, to Encourage the Settling and Planting the Same.

And it further appears: That this Act Lays the Duty on the Importer; whereby the Trade of Great Britain will be affected, and there is no Clause inserted therein (pursuant to Yo'r Majestys Instructions) to Suspend its taking effect, till Your Majestys Pleasure shall be known,

For which Reasons, and that there does not appear any immediate Occasion for the said Supplies, and that no Damage can arise from Repealing the said Act, Since the Assembly may have time to pass another Law to raise the necessary Supplies for which this Act was designed nor lyable to the said Objections Their Lordships Do agree humbly to offer their opinion to Yo'r Majesty that the said Act ought to be repealed and made Null and Void; and in regard the Governor of the said Colony hath acted Contrary to Your Majesty's Instructions by not inserting a Clause to prevent its taking effect till Your Maj'tys Pleasure should be known thereupon: Their Lordships are further of opinion that yo'r Majestys Pleasure should be Signifyed to him, That he do not on any pretence whatsoever presume to Give his assent to any Act of this kind for the future without inserting such a Clause as is before mentioned.

90. Account of Piracies on the Virginia Coast, 1724.[1]

An Account of the Piracies committed by the Spaniards on the Coast of Virginia in the Month of June 1724.

Capt. John Jones of the Ship John and Mary of Virginia bound from Guinea and having on board 175 Negros,[2] on the 5th of June was at Anchor about 2 Leagues distance from Cape-Charles in Virginia, when a Ship bearing British Colours bore down upon him, he believing it to be some Vessel bound to Virginia, and not at all apprehensive of any Pirate (having but the Night before spoke with Capt. Yeo of His Majesty's Ship Enterprize, who assured him there were none on the Coast,) did not offer to make Sail, but was surprized to find himself attack'd with a Command to strike his Colours and come on board in his Boat, and at the same time to see about [23] Signed: "A true Copy. Jas. Vernon." On May 19, 1724, the board wrote to Governor Drysdale that the act laying a duty on liquors and slaves, "being in their Lordps opinion detrimental to the trade of Great Britain", had been repealed (C. O. 5: 1365, p. 275; B. T. Jour., 1722/3-1728, p. 93). The repeal of the act was proclaimed in Virginia Oct. 27, 1724. Hening, IV. 118; Ex. Jour. of Col. Va., IV. 75, 449.

[90] [1] Boston Gazette, July 13, 1724.

[2] The deposition of Capt. John Jones as to the facts of his capture may be found in C. O. 5: 1319, p. 415.

70 Small Arms presented at his Ship, and a threatning to fire into her if he did not immediately repair on board.

At his going on board in his Boat, he with four of his Men were immediately secured, he was carry'd into the Great Cabbin, to a Person call'd the Captain, who order'd about 14 Men, most Spaniards, to take possession of the John and Mary, to get her under Sail, and to follow him: They stood to the Northward with an easy Sail, and about 11 in the forenoon the same day met the Brigt. Prudent-Hannah of Boston bound for Virginia, The Spanish Ship gave chase to her, and coming up with her commanded the Master (Thomas Mousell) to come on board, he came in his Boat with only his Cabbin-boy, and his Boat was immediately sent back with six Spaniards to take possession of his Brigantine. That night the same Brigt. was order'd away with these 6 Spaniards to some of the Spanish Ports in the West-Indies, but to which is not known.

The two Captains, Jones and Mousell, were ordered to lie that night in the same Cabbin with the Spanish Captain, and Capt. Jones speaking Spanish, took the liberty to ask, on what account he had taken his Ship, he was given to understand, that he had a Commission from the Governour of Cuba, which the Spanish Captain told him he would let him see before they parted, but he was not so good as his word.

On the 6th of June the Spaniard with his Prize standing off E.N.E. from the Capes of Virginia, about 8 Leagues, made a Sail, which proved to be the Ship Godolphin of Topsham, bound for Rappahannock River in Virginia, The Spaniard hoisted an English Ensign, and put out a Pendant and an Union Jack, and stood off to intercept that Ship, and under these Colours fired a Great Gun for the Godolphin to bring too, which she did, and then the Master (Theodore Bane) being commanded off in his Boat the Spaniards with the same Boat took possession of his Ship.

The three Captive Masters continued on board the Spanish Ship, till Monday the 8th of June in the Morning, during which time, they received the following Information from several English and Irish Men of that Ships Crew viz. That the said Ship did belong to the Governour or Vice Roy of Cuba, that she is called the St. Francis de la Vela, that the Capt. is Don Benito, or according to the common Appellation given him by his Crew, Signior Don Benito, that he is a Knight of one of the Spanish Orders, that the Ship is a Bristol built Galley, first taken by the Sallee Rovers, retaken from them by a Spanish Man of War, sold at Cales by some Merchants, and by them Fraighted to the Spanish West-Indies, and that she was now fitted out at Port-Princess in Cuba, and hired to Benito by the Governour for a certain Sum of Money, which Benito is to get where he can, but that the better to enable him to do it, that Governour has given him a Commission as a Guarde de Coaste. The Crew consists of about 60 Spaniards, including the Negros and Molattos, 14 English, and 18 French; among the English is one Rich. Holland an Irishman, who goes under the Name of the English Captain, and has a great sway on board, he was formerly at St. Augustines, and concerned in the taking sundry Vessels on the Virginia Coast, after the last Cessation of Arms: Benj. Evans formerly Mate of a New England Ship, is their Mate or Pilot, and very frankly told Capt. Mousell that his Brigantine was such a Vessel as they wanted to make a Privateer of; there are also John Smith and John Moore, Irishmen, who were of the Pirate Taylor's Crew, at his taking the Cassandra in the East-Indies. The next [rest?] of the English on board, and 15 of the French are said to be press'd men.

Capt. Jones by his free and ingenious behaviour, had got so much into the favour of the English and French, that they had promised his Ship should be released without being plundered, but the Spaniards outvoting them, his Scriptore and all his Chests were broke open, about l. 350 Sterling in Gold Dust, 1000 Gallons of Rum, about l. 200 worth of the Remains of his Guinea Cargo, together with 38 of his choicest Slaves, all Men, were taken away and carried on board this Spanish Ship, and he believes had not this Piratical Crew been frighten'd with the appearance of a Sail in the Offing, he had not escaped so well, but that fight [fright?] having put them in a great fear, they sent the Captains Mousell and Bane with the whole Crew of the latter, and the Cabbin boy of the former, on board Jone's Ship, and so left him to proceed to Virginia on the 8th of June about noon, but they carry'd Capt. Bane's Ship and Cargo off with them.[3]

Capt. Jones's loss is computed at near l. 1600, Capt. Banes's Ship and Cargo about l. 3000 and Capt. Mousell's Brigantine about l. 1200 with her Cargo.

Smith the Pilot of the Spaniards told Capt. Mousell that in this Cruize they had taken two New England Brigantines, commanded by Capts. Macarty and Burrington, but when he was asked what was become of the Men, he answered, that was not a proper Question;

[3] "London, Sept. 22. By the last Ship that came from Virginia there is Advice, that the Godolphin of Topsham, Capt. Bare, was arriv'd there. She was one of the Ships formerly mention'd to have been taken off the Capes of Virginia, in June last, by a Spanish Pirate, and plunder'd of all they had that was valuable. The Spaniards kept the Ship several Days and when they let her go, they put 20 Negroes on board; Part of the 36 Slaves they had taken on the 5th of June out of the John and Mary, Captain Jones, bound from Guinea to Virginia, and they made Capt. Bare sign a formal Bill of Lading for the said Negroes, and consigned them to Captain Martin, or Captain Jones. They stiled themselves in the said Bill of Lading, Lords of the High Seas." Boston News Letter, Dec. 17, 1724.

he also said they were to share all their Prizes at the Grand Camanus or Samanus.[4]

91. Petition of Samuel Jacob, 1726.[1]

To the Kings most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of Samuel Jacob and several other Merchants of the Citty of Bristol whose Names are underwritten Humbly Sheweth, That your Petitioners are Owners of the Ship Commerce of Bristol, and that having sent her to the Coast of Africa, to purchase Negroes, the Master of her, was order'd to proceed with them to Virginia, and there to sell them. That the said Ship arrived in York River about the 30th April 1724. And That upon Landing of the Slaves, your Petitioners Agent Mr. Augustine Moor, was Compell'd by the Naval Officer to pay Forty Shillings Current Mony [2] Duty for every Slave, (a particular Account of which is hereinto annexed given upon Oath before hugh Drisdale Esqr. your Majesty's Lieutenant Governour of the Collony of Virginia etc.) under pretence of an Act of Assembly having passed, by which the said Duty was laid on Slaves etc. Which Act of Assembly instead of meeting with your Majesty's Royal Approbation was by your Majesty in Council on the 30th April 1724 Declared void and of none effect; Whereupon your Petitioners directed their Agent in Virginia to Demand the repayment of the Sums thus Collected under Colour of Law, But hitherto have been unable to obtain it, the Treasurer of the said Collony, obstinately refuseing to repay the same.

We therefore most humbly pray your Majesty will be Graciously pleased, to give such Directions thereupon for our Relief, as your Majesty in your great Wisdom shall seem meet. And we shall forever Pray etc. [3]

Mr. Perry, a Virginia Mercht., being sworn acquainted their Lordships that by his Accounts, that province is very plentifully supplied with Negroes, and that there has been but very few of the Company's Ships at Virginia since he has been concerned in Trade, which is about three or four years.

Mr. Bradley,[2] being sworn, acquainted their Lordships, that he has been in the Trade to Virginia above 20 Years, and that the province has been well supplied with Negroes by the separate Traders. That the Labour of a Negroe produces about 15 ll. annual Duty to the Crown. That he believes Negroes are cheaper now than they were formerly; but admits that there was formerly a Duty of 5 per Cent. laid on Negroes which made them dearer.

We have no accounts in our Office from Virginia of the number of Negroes that have been annually imported there either by the African

On June 30, 1726, the board asked for an account of the money collected under the act of 1723. [93] [1] C. O. 5: 1365, pp. 288-290. Drysdale was lieutenant governor from Sept. 27, 1722, to July 22, 1726. His sympathies in the controversy over the duties on negroes were apparently with the Virginians. On May 12, 1726, he wrote to the assembly: "You laid a Duty last Session on Liquors and Slaves imported as had been done by former Assemblies with very good Effect to make those Assemblies more Easy to the Country by Lessening the Levy per poll But the interferring interest of the Affrican Company has deprived us of that Advantage and has obtained a Repeal of that Law." Jour. of Burgesses, 1712-1726, p. 400; *Va. And we desire for the future a regular Accot. of the same may be annually sent to us.

94. Concerning an Act for laying a Duty on Slaves, 1728-1729.

William Gooch to the Board of Trade.[1]

My Lords, . . . I am now to make some observations on the Laws herewith sent, and shal begin with those which are not to take place untill they receive his Majesty's approbation.

And the first is, an Act for laying a Duty on Slaves imported and appointing a Treasurer.[2] By it a Duty of 40 s. an Head is laid on all Slaves imported into this Colony for sale to be paid by the Importer, with the usual clauses for the regular Collecting and Paying that Duty; and for drawing back the whole upon the exportation within three moneths. This Duty is to commence upon his Majesty's assent to the Act being publickly notified in this Dominion, and thence to continue for three years and no longer. The money arising from it is to be accounted for by a Treasurer, and disposed of to such Publick uses as the Governor, Council and Burgesses shall agree upon. I must observe to your Lordships that though the particular Services for which this money is intended are not express'd in the Act, yet there is a constant Charge wch annually arises for the prosecution of Criminals, for recompensing the Owners of Slaves condemn'd for capital offences, for discharging the Sallarys of many publick officers, and for keeping the capitol and other publick Buildings in repair;

[94] [1] C. O. 5: 1321, f. 79. Endorsed: "Letter from Major Gooch Lt. Go'r of Virginia to the Board without Date. recd. with his Dated Of July 18th, 1728. Recd. 30 July 1728." The reports of the naval officers, covering the period from Sept. 29, 1727, to Apr. 25, 1728, and distinguishing between negroes imported by the separate traders and those by the African Company, were received with this letter (ibid., pp. 153-158). William Gooch was lieutenant governor from Oct. 13, 1727, to June, 1740, and again, this time as Sir William, from July, 1741, to June 20, 1749.

[2] Of this act Hening gives the title only, placing it in the spring of 1727, though it was approved Mar. 30, 1728 (Hening, IV. 182). A curious record in the Journal of the Burgesses suggests that the council rather than the Burgesses was desirous of placing the duty upon incoming negroes: Mar. 28, 1728, "A Motion being made That this House would come to a Resolution not to present the Bill which hath passed this House and the Council, For laying a Duty upon Slaves, in regard that the Council had been pleased to refuse to agree to the passing a Bill For lessening the Levy by the Poll, which was the true design of laying the duties by which the present Revenue in the hands of the Treasurer of Virginia hath been raised. Order'd, That the sd Motion be taken into consideration to morrow." No further mention of the motion appears. In commenting upon it the editor suggests that since the members of the council were large slave-holders it is easily conceivable that they were not unconscious that the revenue bill would increase the value of their property (Jour. of Burgesses, 1727-1740, pp. xvii, 49). For the progress of the bill through the House of Burgesses see ibid., pp. 33-39, 52.

which cannot be supported without such a Duty as is here proposed, nor can anything of importance be undertaken for the benefit of the Publick without such a reserv'd Fund, seeing a Poll-Tax in Tobacco has been found grievous to the People, and through the incertainty of its value of very little encouragement to People to engage in the publick Service. But besides, 'tis the common topick among the People that while the like or a greater Duty on Negroes subsists and has continued for a long time in Maryland a Proprietary Government, it is hard that They who are under his Majesty's immediate Government should be restrained from the same means of securing and improving their Country; and from these considerations moved the Assembly to attempt the re-enacting a Law which had been formerly disapprov'd, in hopes, that its conformity now to the King's Instructions, and the necessity of a Fund for the publick service, will induce his Majesty to give it his Royal Sanction, for the short time it is to continue. The only objection, I think, that can be brought against this Law is, the private Interest of the Importer: but when it is considered that the price of Negroes will always be advanced in proportion to the Duty, they can't be sufferers by it. And the money will be taken out of their pockets, who are the advocates for it. If therefore your Lordships have no other Exception to this Law, I hope the united desires of all the People of this Colony will obtain your Lordship's favourable Representation of it to his Majesty. . . .

To the Kings most Excellent Majesty in Councill.

The humble Petition of the several Merchants of Liverpoole Trading to the Coast of Africa and Yo'r Majestys Plantations [3]

Sheweth, That an Act was past by the generall assembly of yo'r Majestys Colony of Virginia on the 30th of March 1728, Entituled an Act for laying a Duty on Slaves Imported, and for appointing a Treasurer, by which Act a Duty of forty shillings a head is laid and imposed on all Negroes imported into the said Colony to be paid by the Importers thereof which Duty is by the said Act applyed for lessening the Levy by the Poll, and Defraying any Publick charge whatever. That this Act is lately transmitted home in order to be laid before your Majesty for your Royal consideration. That Yo'r Petitioners humbly apprehend and represent the said Act to be contrary to yo'r Majesty's Instructions given to your Governor of Virginia and to express orders and Determinations made by Yo'r

[3] C. O. 5: 1321, pp. 143-144. The merchants of London and Bristol also petitioned against this measure (ibid., pp. 127-128, 135). The names of the Bristol petitioners are not given; those for London are: Joseph Lowe, William Hunt, Edward Hankin, Edwin Sommers, Nutt and Baker, Samuel Bonham, Daniel Alford, Thomas Truman, Humphrey Morrice, William Gerrish, Samuel Travers, Richard Harris, and James Kirwan.

Majestys Royall Predecessors in Councill, as it lays a Duty on the British merchant to support the Expences of the Government of the Plantations and is prejudicial to the Trade of Great Britain which has been always discountenanced, and by a late order in Councill expressly forbid. Your Petitioners also humbly represent, that the laying this Duty on Negroes imported is unreasonable in it self, greatly Prejudicial to Yo'r Petitioners and the Negroe Trade in general (on which together with the Plantation Trade this Port entirely depends) highly Injurious to the true Interest of the Plantations and in the consequences of it destructive not only to the whole Plantation Trade, but to the Trade and Navigation of these Kingdoms.

Your Petitioners therefore most humbly pray Your Majesty that they may be heard in what they have to offer against the said Act and that Yo'r Majesty will thereupon be Graciously pleased to Disallow of and Repeale the same and strictly Enjoyn Yo'r Governor of Virginia not to pass any Act of the like nature for the future.

And Yo'r Petitioners shall ever Pray etc.

[Francis Fane to the Board of Trade.][4]

To the Right Honourable The Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations.

My Lords, In Obedience to Your Lordships Commands Signified to me by Mr. Popples Letter of the 8th of Octobr. I have perused and Considered an Act Lately pass'd in Virginia Entituled an Act for Laying a Duty on Slaves Imported and for appointing a Treasurer; And I beg Leave to Observe to Your Lordshipps that the first Act of this kind which met with an Opposition from the Merchants of Great Britain was pass'd in the Year 1723 and Laid the same duty of 40 s. a head upon all Negroes imported into Virginia.

That Act I find underwent a Long Consideration and upon the 29th Janry. 1723/4 Your Lordshipps made a Report thereon to His Maj'ty Stating some former Acts Laying a Duty of 5 l. per head from 1710 to 1718 which the Merchants did not Complain of thinking the Colony of Virginia would soon find the Ill Effects of such an Act which they did, for from the Year 1718 to 1723 no Act was passed Laying a Duty on the Importation of Negroes.

And Your Lordshipps are of Opinion that though the Duty laid by the said Act in 1723 was much Less than the former, Yett the same must be Attended with Ill Consequences and would discourage the planting and Cultivating Naval Stores Especial in the Two new Countries where great Numbers of Negroes would be wanting and where His Majesty had thought fit to remitt the payment of any Quitt Rents for Seven Years to Encourage the Settling and Planting the Same.

For which reasons and Considering the said Duty was laid on the Importer by which the Trade of Great Britain would be affected, Your Lordships reported the said Act was proper to be repealed and that the Assembly might pass a new Law not Liable to the said Objections to raise the necessary Supplies for which the Said Act was designed.

The Said Act with the Report of Your Lordshipps being referred to a Committee of Councill the 17th April 1724 They made their Report Stating the Facts in the same manner with Your Lordships and giving their Opinion thereon in the same words with this Addition that His Maj'tys pleasure should be signified to the Governour of Virginia that he did not on any pretence whatever presume to give his Assent to any Acts of that kind for the future without Incerting a [4] C. O. 5: 1321, p. 108, f. 217; Hist. MSS. Comm., Fourteenth Rept., pt. X., Dartmouth Papers, II. 5; summarized in Va. Mag. of Hist., XVI. 85-87. The petitions called forth by the act of 1728 were referred to the Board of Trade in September (Acts P. C. C., III. 64, 201-202; C. O. 5: 1321, pp. 125, 133, 141). Francis Fane acted as counsel to the board.

Clause to Suspend its taking Effect till his Majesties pleasure should be known thereon, pursuant to which Report 30th of April 1724 by Order in Councill of this Date his Majesty declared His disallowance of the Said Act and repealed the same and further ordered the Governour of Virginia not to presume for the future on any pretence whatever to Assent to any Act of this kind without incerting such a Clause as above mentioned.

I find by the Governor of Virginias Instruction he is particularly required not to pass any Bill wherein the Trade or Shipping of this Kingdom is any ways Affected unless a Clause be incerted therein Suspending the Execution thereof untill His Majestys pleasure be received thereon.

I must acquaint Your Lordshipps that there is a Clause in this Act Suspending the Execution of it till His Maj'ts pleasure is known; But I humbly apprehend for the following reasons that this Act is not fit to be passed into Law.

1st In regard to the great prejudice Virginia itself may sustain thereby for as this Colony cannot Subsist or be improved without the planters are furnished with large and constant supplies of Negroes and at the Easiest Rates so it cannot be supposed that the Merchants will so readily and freely Import them while they are clogged with Duties which raise the Value of them and discourage their sending a sufficient Number to the Colony or at least disable them from settling at such Easy rates as they might otherwise do; And I am informed Experience has Shewn the fatall consequences attending a Duty on Negroes, for from 1710 to 1718 when there was a Duty on them the Number of Negroes Imported into Virginia during these 8 years was very inconsiderable and those few Sold at Excessive prices, So that Laying a Duty on Negroes can only tend to make them Scarcer and Dearer the Two things that for the good of our Trade and for the Benefit of Virginia ought chiefly to be guarded against, since it is well known that the cheapness of Virginia Tobacco in European Marketts is the true Cause of the great Consumption thereof in Europe, And one would have therefore Expected rather to have Seen an Act allowing a premium on the importation of Negroes to have Encouraged the bringing them in than an Act laying so large a Duty to Discourage their Importation.

2dly As it affects Great Britain the Mother Country to Virginia in regard to the revenues of Great Britain and the dependancy of Virginia, That it Affects the Revenue of Great Britain is Shewn by the aforegoing reason for if Negroes will by this Act be rendred Scarcer and Dearer as I apprehend is very clear It must then of necessity follow that their Annuall Crops of Tobacco must grow Less and Less for want of a Sufficient Supply of Negroes the Number of Hoggsheads Imported hither decrease and the Revenue arising from this Head be greatly reduced. That this Act is inconsistent with the dependancy of Virginia on Great Britain I take to be clear from considering that these Negroes are Purchased by the British Merchants that they are bought on the Coast of Africa in Exchange of Our own Manifacturies Imported from Great Britain to the Coast of Africa for that purpose and therefore for Virginia to lay a Duty on Negroes so purchased and brought to them is the same thing as Laying a Duty on the Importation of British Manifactures for the Obstructing the Importation of Negroes is in Effect the Same as if they Obstructed the Importation of British Manifacturies.[5]

October 14, 1729, WHITEHALL.

Mr. Leheup and Mr. Drummond being withdrawn, Directions were given for preparing the Draughts of Letters to the Governors of His Maj'ts several Colonies in America, where Acts have been pass'd laying Duties on Negroes imported there, recommending to them to procure Acts to be pass'd in their several Governments whereby other Duties may be substituted in Lieu of those on Negroes imported, in as much as the said Duties on Negroes do in some measure enhance the price of labour and consequently the price of several commodities produc'd in the Plantations, wherein our neighbours rival us in foreign markets.

95. ACT FOR LAYING A DUTY ON SLAVES, 1732.[1]

An Act for laying a Duty upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyers. May it please your most excellent Majesty,

I. We your majesty's most dutiful and loial subjects, the representatives of your people in your colony and dominion of Virginia, now met in a general assembly, taking into our serious consideration,

[5] After extended consideration the act was repealed and an Order in Council to that effect issued Aug. 18, 1729. See C. O. 5: 1322, p. 53, and 391: 38, pp. 134-136, 240-241, 261; B. T. Jour., 1728/9-1734, pp. 33-35.

[6] C. O. 391: 38, p. 261; B. T. Jour., 1728/9-1734, p. 68. The representation which recommended the repeal of the Virginia act had been ordered by the board May 22, 1729 (C. O. 391: 38, p. 134). The Order in Council which repealed it (Aug. 18, 1729) was read at a meeting of the board on Sept. 23, 1729. B. T. Jour., 1728/9-1734, p. 62.

[95] [1] Hening, IV. 317-322. The House of Burgesses, after receiving from Governor Gooch directions as to how to frame an acceptable bill, drew up one conforming to his suggestions which was presented May 31, 1731, and received the governor's assent July 1, 1732 (Jour. of Burgesses, 1727-1740, pp. xxiii, 131, 165). The two changes introduced in the bill were, the levying of the duty upon the buyer, and the making it an ad valorem not a specific duty. In October, 1733, suit was brought against Augustine Moore for failing to report negroes that had been anchored in Back River about twelve o'clock the exigencies of your government here, and that the duty laid upon liquors will not be sufficient to defray the necessary expences thereof; do humbly represent to your majesty, that no other duty can be laid upon our import or export, without oppressing your subjects, than a duty upon slaves imported, to be paid by the buyers, agreeable to your majesty's instruction to your lieutenant-governour: We therefore beseech your majesty, that it may be enacted,

II. And be it enacted, by the Lieutenant Governor, Council, and Burgesses, of this present General Assembly, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this act, there shall be levied and paid to our sovereign lord the king, his heirs and successors, for all slaves imported or brought into this colony and dominion, for sale, either by land or water, from any port or place whatsoever, by the buyer or purchaser, after the rate of five pounds per cent. on the amount of each respective purchase, within forty days next after such bargain or purchase, made; to and for the uses, intents, and purposes herein after mentioned, and to and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever: And if any buyer or purchaser of any slave or slaves, chargeable with the said duty, by this act, shall fail or neglect to pay the same, within forty days after any such bargain or purchase, for such slave or slaves, as shall be then living, and to give a just and true account of the slaves by him purchased, and for how much, to the collector of the said duty, nearest the place where such buyer or purchaser inhabits, or where the vessel, importing such slaves, shall lie at the time of the sale, every such person, so failing or neglecting, shall forfeit and pay, five pounds current money, for every slave so concealed, or for which the said duty shall not be paid, according to the directions of this act, within the time aforesaid: And every collector, upon receipt of the said duty by this act imposed, is hereby enjoined and required to give a receipt under his hand, for the money by him received, expressing the number of slaves for which the same was paid, and the time of paiment thereof to the person paying the same.

III. And for a direction to the said collectors, in receiving the said duty in current money, where the contract shall be made for sterling, Be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That when any bargain or contract shall be made, for any slave or slaves, in sterling money, there shall be answered and paid to the collector of the said duty, for the difference of money, after the rate of twenty pounds per cent. upon the amount of the purchase in sterling money, over and above the said duty of five per cent. by this act imposed, and no more.

of July 1, the duty act having passed at or near four o'clock. The negroes were not entered until July 5, but judgment was rendered the defendant on the plea that anchoring in the river constituted importation. Catterall, Judicial Cases, I. 85-86.

IV. And be it further enacted, That when any person shall sell any slave or slaves for tobacco, or any other commodity, and not for sterling, or current money, the seller, at the time of sale, shall set a value upon such slave or slaves, so sold, in current money, according to which valuation the buyer or purchaser shall be chargeable with, and pay to the said collector or other person impowered to receive the same, the said duty of five pounds per cent.

V. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That if any person or persons, after the passing of this act, shall sell any slave or slaves for which the said duty is paiable by virtue thereof, to any person not being an inhabitant of this colony, such person or persons so selling, shall, at the time of the sale, receive the said duty, and account for, and pay the same to the collector of the said duty, nearest the place where the seller inhabits, or where the vessel importing such slaves shall lie at the time of the sale; upon pain of forfeiting, for every slave so sold, the sum of five pounds current money.

VI. Provided also, That no duty shall be paid or required of the buyer or purchaser of any slave born in this colony, or imported or brought into the same before the passing of this act, or for which the said duty shall have been once paid.

VII. [For slaves exported within a year after their importation, the duty shall be returned.]

VIII. But forasmuch, as it is very easy to convey slaves into the province of North Carolina, and to bring them back again, and thereby to evade the paiment of the duty aforesaid:

IX. Be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That no drawback shall be allowed for any slaves carried or exported by land or water, into the said province of North Carolina: And when any person shall make such oath as aforesaid, in order to entitle himself to the drawback, he shall likewise swear, that the slaves intended to be exported, shall not be carried into the said province.

X. And to the end, the number of slaves sold, and the persons purchasing the same, and whether the duty by this act imposed, has been duly answered and paid, may be more certainly known and discovered:

XI. Be it further enacted, That all and every person and persons, to whom after the passing of this act any slaves shall be consigned, or by whom any slaves shall be sold and disposed of, for which the buyer or purchaser shall be chargeable with the paiment of the said duty, by virtue of this act, do and shall, within three months after any slave shall be imported or brought into this colony, by land or water, transmit to the next collector of the duties by this act imposed, a list or manifest, in writing, of the number of slaves by him sold, to whom, and for how much; and therein shall distinguish and express at what time such slaves were sold, and the place of abode of the buyers, respectively, and how many slaves, if any, remain unsold; and if any slave shall remain unsold after the expiration of the said three months, in that case, such list or manifest as aforesaid, shall be transmitted as aforesaid, to the said collector, within twenty days after the said remaining slaves shall be all sold: And every buyer or purchaser, liable to the paiment of the duty on slaves, by virtue of this act, shall, if thereunto required by any collector of the said duty, at any time after the expiration of forty days from the time of such bargain or purchase, at the usual place of such buyer or purchaser's abode or residence, produce and shew to the said collector, such receipt as is herein before directed to be given, upon paiment of the said duties, to manifest the paiment thereof; and if such buyer or purchaser shall fail to produce such receipt, such failure shall be taken for a conviction, that the duty, for which no receipt shall be produced, hath not been duly answered and paid; and such buyer or purchaser, shall be liable to the forfeitures and penalties by this act inflicted, for concealing purchased slaves, or not paying the duty within the time herein before limited and appointed for paiment thereof.

XII. And be it further enacted, That if any buyer or purchaser of any slave or slaves, chargeable with the paiment of the duty by this act imposed, shall have imported into this colony, any sum or sums of money, and made such proof, and obtained such certificate, as in and by an act of this present session of assembly, intituled, An Act for laying a duty on Liquors, is mentioned and directed, upon producing such certificate to the collector of the said duty, such collector is hereby authorised and required, to make an abatement or allowance of fifteen per cent. in the paiment of the duty for any slave or slaves bought or purchased by the importer thereof; and upon paiment of the said duty, the collector thereof shall endorse on such certificate the sum by him received.

XIII. [The penalties incurred under this law shall be divided between the informer and the governor.]

XIV. [The governor is to appoint collectors.]

XV. And be it further enacted, That all and every sum and sums of money raised, or to be raised, by virtue of this act, shall be constantly accounted for by the collector or collectors thereof, upon oath, and paid to John Holloway, esq. treasurer, or to the treasurer of Virginia, for the time being: And the said John Holloway (and in case of his death, or disability, the treasurer for the time being, who shall be appointed in the same manner as is directed and prescribed by one act made in the twelfth year of the reign of the late king George the first, intituled, An Act for appointing a Treasurer); shall give security in the sum of one thousand pounds sterling; and shall have all the powers and authorities, in the execution of his office, and the same salary for receiving the duty imposed by this act, as in and by the said last mentioned act are given and allowed: And the said John Holloway, and the treasurer for the time being, shall account for the duties aforesaid, to the governor, council, and burgesses of the general assembly, upon oath.

XVI. And the said duty is hereby appropriated, and shall be applied for the lessening the levy by the poll, and to and for such other use and uses, as the general assembly, from time to time, shall direct and appoint.

XVII. And this act shall continue and be in force, for four years next after the passing thereof, and no longer.[2]

96. Colonel William Byrd to the Earl of Egmont, 1736.[1]

Virginia, July 12, 1736.

. . . Your Lord'ps opinion concerning Rum and Negros is certainly very just, and your excludeing both of them from Your Colony of Georgia will be very happy. . . .

I wish my Lord we coud be blesst with the same Prohibition. They import so many Negros hither, that I fear this Colony will some time or other be confirmd by the Name of New Guinea. I am sensible of many bad consequences of multiplying these Ethiopians amongst us. They blow up the pride, and ruin the Industry of our White People, who seing a Rank of poor Creatures below them, detest work for fear it shoud make them look like Slaves. Then that poverty which will ever attend upon Idleness, disposes them as much to pilfer as it dos the Portuguese, who account it much more like a Gentleman to steal, than to dirty their hands with Labour of any kind.

Another unhappy Effect of Many Negros is the necessity of being severe. Numbers make them insolent, and then foul Means must do what fair will not. We have however nothing like the Inhumanity here that is practiced in the Islands, and God forbid we ever shoud. But these base Tempers require to be rid with a tort Rein, or they will be apt to throw their Rider. Yet even this is terrible to a good

[2] In August, 1734, this act was renewed for another period of four years, which would carry it to July, 1740: "Whereas the act of this general assembly, made at the last session, intituled, An Act for laying a Duty upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyers, hath been found very easy to the subjects of this colony, and no ways burthensome to the traders in slaves: To the end therefore that a competent revenue may be raised, for preventing or lessening a poll tax" (Hening, IV. 394). By frequent renewals the measure was carried to July, 1751. It seems then to have lapsed until February, 1752, when it was revived, and by repeated re-enactment continued until all importation into Virginia was forbidden.

naturd Man, who must submit to be either a Fool or a Fury. And this will be more our unhappy case, the more Negros are increast amongst us.

But these private mischeifs are nothing if compard to the publick danger. We have already at least 10,000 Men of these descendants of Ham fit to bear Arms,[2] and their Numbers increase every day as well by birth as Importation. And in case there shoud arise a Man of desperate courage amongst us, exasperated by a desperate fortune, he might with more advantage than Cataline kindle a Servile War. Such a man might be dreadfully mischeivous before any opposition could be formd against him, and tinge our Rivers as wide as they are with blood, besides the Calamity which woud be brought upon us by such an Attempt, it woud cost our Mother Country many a fair Million to make us as profitable as we are at present.

It were therefore worth the consideration of a British Parliament, My Lord, to put an end to this unchristian Traffick of makeing Merchandize of Our Fellow Creatures. At least the farther Importation of them in Our Colonys shoud be prohibited lest they prove as troublesome and dangerous everywhere, as they have been lately in Jamaica, where besides a vast expence of Mony, they have cost the lives of many of his Majesty's Subjects. We have mountains in Virginia too, to which they may retire as safely, and do as much mischeif as they do in Jamaica. All these matters duly considerd, I wonder the Legislature will Indulge a few ravenous Traders to the danger of the Publick safety, and such Traders as woud freely sell their Fathers, their Elder Brothers, and even the Wives of their bosomes, if they coud black their faces and get anything by them. . . .

August 18, 1736.

Mr. Carter reported, That the Committee, to whom it is referred to prepare and draw up a State of the Duty upon Slaves, and the several Paiments that have been made, with the Amount thereof, had had under their Consideration, such Accounts of that Duty for the Years 1732, 1733, and 1734, as have hitherto been returned into the Treasury; and having discovered diverse fraudulent Concealments of that Duty, had agreed upon a Report; which he read in his Place: And afterwards delivered the same in at the Table, where it was again read, as follows:

[2] In 1730 Governor Gooch had reported to the Board of Trade that there were 30,000 negroes in Virginia in a population of 114,000. C. O. 5: 1322.

[97] [1] Jour. of Burgesses, 1727-1740, p. 259.

That it appears to the Committee, That considerable Numbers of Slaves have been imported into this Colony, from the West-Indies, and other His Majesty's Plantations in America, consigned to the Masters of Vessels importing the same; or to Merchants, Strangers or Passengers, on board such Vessels, who have sold the Slaves to them respectively consigned; and then departed this Colony, without rendering any Accounts of the Sales, or paying any Duty for such Slaves.

That others have been consigned to, and imported by, diverse Inhabitants of this Colony; and in their Accounts delivered to the Naval Officers, are said to be kept by the Importers, for their own Use; but nevertheless, have been actually sold, and no Accounts of the Sales rendered, nor Duty paid.

That the Method of accounting for the said Duty, as hitherto practiced, is irregular and defective, and has occasioned Concealments to a considerable Value, by Persons who have bought Slaves, but never paid the Duty; which will more fully appear, when your Committee shall be enabled to perfect their Inquiries by the Accounts of the Sales not yet delivered in, or laid before the House.

And that to prevent the lessening of Public Revenue, by such Practices for the future, it will be necessary to prepare, and bring in a Bill, for the better and more effectual Collecting the Duty upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyers; and for preventing Frauds.

Ordered, That Leave be given to bring in a Bill, for the better and more effectual Collecting the Duty upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyers; and that the said Committee do prepare, and bring in the same.[2]

98. Act for laying a Duty on Slaves, 1736.[1]

An Act for laying a Duty upon Liquors imported by Land; and better securing the Duty upon Slaves; and for other purposes therein mentioned.

VII. Be it therefore enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That from henceforth, the buyer of any slave or slaves, imported or brought into this colony, as aforesaid, shall pay the said duty down, or secure the same to be paid, within forty days after such purchase, to the collector: And if such slave or slaves, for which the duty has been paid, shall happen to die within forty days, limited in the said former act; upon oath thereof made before any justice of the peace, such buyer shall draw back the whole duty, and the collectors thereof are hereby required to repay the same.

[2] The bill was introduced and first read on Sept. 7, 1736, and received the assent of the governor Sept. 23. Ibid., pp. 290, 315.

[98] [1] Hening, IV. 471-474.

VIII. [One collector only in each district is empowered to receive the duty.]

IX. And to the end, the said buyers of slaves, chargeable with the duties, may be more speedily known, Be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That all and every person and persons to whom any slaves shall be consigned, for sale, shall, within two months after the arrival of the ship importing the same, deliver to the collector of the duties on slaves, in the district where the same shall be imported, a true manifest or account of the slaves by him sold, the name and place of abode of every person buying the same, the respective prices at which each slave was sold, and how many of the said slaves, if any, remain then unsold: And if any slave or slaves shall remain unsold, after the expiration of the said two months; in that case, the like manifest or account shall be transmitted to the collector, within twenty days after the remaining slaves shall be all sold; and shall, on the last mentioned manifest make oath before some justice of the peace: Which oath the said justice is hereby impowered and required to administer: That the manifests by him delivered or transmitted to the collector do contain a true account of all the slaves sold by him or them out of such ship, including as well the slaves allowed to the masters and officers as privileged slaves, if he sold the same, as those properly belonging to the owners of such ship, or vessel: And every master of a ship or vessel importing slaves, shall, before his clearing, deliver the like manifest, upon oath, of all the priviledged slaves imported, to whom sold, and at what price; and the collector shall within ten days next after the said respective manifests are returned to him, deliver to the treasurer of the said duty, for the time being, a true account of all the persons who have purchased slaves, and have not (within the said forty days after such purchase) satisfied and paid the duties paiable for the same; and so from time to time, after the expiration of the said forty days; and such return duly made, shall entitle the collector to his salary for the duty, out of the forfeitures, or any former paiment, when the same shall be recovered, in the manner herein after mentioned.

X. And for the better recovery of the duties aforesaid, which have heretofore or hereafter shall become due and paiable, it shall and may be lawful for the treasurer of the said duty, for the time being, to commence and prosecute any action or information, qui tam, in the general court, for recovery of any penalty inflicted by the said former act, altho' the same shall not amount to ten pounds sterling; and no act or time of limitation shall be pleaded, or judged to be a bar to any such action.

XI. And whereas, divers persons to whom slaves imported have been consigned, as well as the importers of slaves, taking advantage of certain words in the said former act, have taken and chosen for themselves certain slaves, and have returned the same in their accounts of sales to the collectors of the said duties, as kept for their own use, and therefore have refused to pay the duty for the same, when the said act, or any thing therein contained, is not capable of any such construction: Therefore, for the recovery of such duties as have heretofore been defrauded by the said pretences, and for preventing the like abuses for the future,

XII. Be it further enacted, That all and every person and persons who heretofore have withheld the said duties upon such pretences, as aforesaid, and shall not pay the same to some collector thereof, within two months after the passing of this act, shall forfeit and pay the penalties in the said former act inflicted; and all and every person and persons hereafter failing to pay the said duties, upon the like pretences, shall be also liable to the same penalties: To be recovered, as in this act directed. . . .

XVI. And whereas it appears, that some collectors of the duties upon liquors and slaves, do sometimes delay to account with the treasurer half-yearly, for the duties by them received, whereby losses may be occasioned to that revenue, Be it further enacted, That such collectors be and are hereby required to account with the treasurer every half year; (to wit,) on the twenty-fifth day of April, and the twenty fifth day of October, every year, or within fifteen days afterwards, upon pain of forfeiting one half of their commissions; to be deducted out of their accounts, by the treasurer; and to be by him carried to the credit of the public treasury.

99. Instructions to the Earl of Albemarle, 1737.[1]

And in order to the better Execution of the Laws and Statutes abovementioned, upon the first Notice of the Arrival of any ship or ships within the Limits of any Port of or belonging to your Govern-

[99] [1] C. O. 5: 1366, pp. 237-238. The second Earl of Albemarle was governor in chief of Virginia from Sept. 6, 1737, to Dec. 23, 1754. A draft of Albemarle's commission, drawn up Sept. 28, 1737, contained the following clauses: "Whereas Acts have been passed in some of Our Plantations in America for laying Duties on the Importation and Exportation of Negroes to the great discouragement of the Merchants trading thither from the Coast of Africa. . . .

"It is Our Will and Pleasure that you do not give your Assent to or pass any Act imposing Duties upon Negroes Imported in Our said Colony under your Government payable by the Importer, or upon any Slaves Exported that have not been sold in Our said Colony and continued there for the space of twelve Months. . . .

"And We do further expressly command and require you to give unto us and to our Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, an Account every half year of what number of negroes Our said Colony is Supplied with, that is what number by the African Company and what by the Seperate Traders, and at what Rates sold." Ibid.

ment which have or are suspected to have on Board any Negroes Goods or Commodities of the Growth Produce or Manufacture of the East Indies, Madagascar, or any other parts or Places beyond the Cape of Bona Esperanza, within the Limits of Trade granted to the United East India Company, pursuant to the aforementioned Act of the Ninth and Tenth of King William; You shall immediately cause the Officers of Our Customs in your Governement (and any other Officer or Persons in Aid of them) to go on Board such ship or ships and to Visit the same and to Examine the Masters or other Commanders, the Officers and Sailors on Board such ship or ships and their Charter-parties, Invoyces, Cocquets and other Credentials Testimonials or Documents, and if they find . . . that there are on Board any such Goods, Commodities or Negroes as is above mentioned, that they do give Notice to the Master or other person having then the command of such Ship or Ships forthwith to depart out of the Limits of your Government, without giving them any Relief Support Aid or Assistance altho it should be pretended, that such Ship or Ships were or the same really should be in distress, want, disability, danger, of sinking, or for or upon any other reason or pretence whatsoever. And that you Our Governor or Commander in Chief do by no means suffer any Goods, Merchandize or Negroes from on Board such Ship or Ships to be landed or brought on Shore upon any Account or Excuse whatsoever. And it is Our further Will and Pleasure that if any such Ship or Ships being Foreign having on Board any such Goods, Merchandize, or Negroes do not upon Notice given to the Master or other person having the Command thereof as soon as conveniently may be, depart out of the Limits of your Government, and from the Coasts thereof, without landing selling or Bartering any of the said Goods or Negroes, You Our Governor or the Commander in Chief for the time being, shall cause the said Ship or Ships and Goods and Negroes to be seized and proceeded against according to Law. But if such Ship or Ships having such Goods or Negroes on Board and Ent'ring into any Port or Place or coming upon any of the Coasts or Shoars of Our said Colony under your Government, do belong to our subjects and do break Bulk, or sell Barter, Exchange or otherwise dispose of the said Goods or Negroes or any part thereof contrary to Law, you are, to take care that such Ship or Ships, with the Guns, Tackle, Apparel and Furniture thereof, and all Goods and Merchandize Laden thereupon, and the proceed and effects of the same be immediately seized, and that the Laws in such case made and provided be put in Execution with the greatest care, diligence and application. But if any ship belonging to the Subjects of any Foreign State or Potentate, having on Board any Negroes or East India Commodities shall be actually bound to some Place or Port in the West Indies belonging to any Foreign Prince or State from some European Port and such ship shall happen to be driven in by necessity and be in real distress, the same may be supply'd with what is absolutely necessary for her relief. But you shall not take, have or receive, nor permit or suffer any person to take, have or receive any Negroes [2] or other the said East India Commodities in payment or satisfaction for such relief. That if any Officer of our Customs or other Officer employed by you Our Governor or Commander in Chief in Visiting searching or seizing such Ship or Ships, Goods, Merchandize or Negroes be corrupt, negligent or remiss in the discharge of his Duty therein, We do hereby require you to suspend him from the Execution of his said Office. . . .

An Act, for amending and further continuing an Act intituled, an Act, for laying a Duty upon Slaves.

I. Whereas, the duty upon slaves imported, as the same is laid, by one act of assembly made in the fifth and sixth years of his majesty's reign, intituled, An Act, for laying a Duty upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyers; which said act was continued by one other act, made in the eighth year of his majesty's reign hath been found, by experience, to be an easy expedient for raising a revenue towards the lessening of a poll tax, always grievous to the people of this colony and is no ways burthensome to the traders in slaves. And whereas, the method of collecting the said duty upon slaves, prescribed by the said first recited act; and by one other act, made in the tenth year of his majesty's reign, intituled, An Act for laying a Duty upon Liquors imported by Land: and better securing the Duty upon Slaves; and for other purposes therein mentioned; hath proved very inconvenient, and given great opportunities for frauds: Therefore, for amending and further continuing the said first recited act:

II. Be it enacted, by the Lieutenant-Governor, Council and Burgesses, of this present General Assembly, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that every importer of slaves into this colony, either by land or water, for sale, if such importer shall sell the same himself; or if such slaves shall be consigned to any other person, than the person or persons who shall take upon him or them, the sale and disposal of such slaves, shall be, and he, and they, are hereby appointed collector and collectors of the said duty, upon the slaves so imported and sold by him, or them, respectively. And upon

[2] While the returns from the naval officers in the years immediately preceding this fail to show negro importation from Madagascar, reference to the reports for the years 1718-1727 discloses a surprising amount of such importation.

all other slaves, in case such importation shall be by water, that shall be imported in the same ship or vessel, belonging to the master, or other officer, commonly called privileged slaves: And every buyer or purchaser of any slave or slaves so imported, shall, upon the sale and delivery of such slave or slaves, pay down the duty, mentioned in the said first recited act, to such collector or collectors; or give his promisory note, for paiment of the same, within forty days after the time of such sale and delivery. And in case any slave or slaves, for which the duty shall be so paid, or secured to be paid, as aforesaid, shall happen to die, within the said forty days, and the buyer or purchaser shall make oath thereof, before some justice of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for the said collector or collectors; and he and they are hereby impowered and directed, upon producing and delivering a certificate of such oath to him or them, to refund and pay back to the buyer or purchaser, the said duty, if the same shall have been paid; or deliver up the promisory note given, for the payment thereof, as the case may be. And if any importer of slaves, or other person or persons taking upon him or them the sale and disposal of slaves, as aforesaid, shall neglect or refuse to receive the said duty; or take notes for the paiment thereof, as herein before is mentioned; every such person and persons shall be and is, and are hereby made chargeable with the paiment of the said duty, in the same manner, as the buyer or purchaser is made chargeable by the said first recited act, or by this act.

III. Provided always, That if any importer of slaves, or other person or persons, taking upon him or them, the sale and disposal of slaves so imported, shall not be an inhabitant or inhabitants of this colony; in such case, the buyers and purchasers of any slave and slaves so imported, shall pay the duty aforesaid, to the naval officer of the district where the ship or vessel, in case the same shall be imported by water: And if such slaves shall be imported by land, then to the naval officer who shall live nearest to the place where such slaves shall be sold, in the manner prescribed by the first recited act, and the said act made in the tenth year of his majesty's reign; and such naval officer is hereby appointed collector of the said duty accordingly.

IV. [Collectors shall account for the duties, and receive the salary of six pounds in the hundred.] And such collector or collectors, if he or they have had the sale and disposal of any slave or slaves, shall, at the time of such accounting, deliver to the treasurer of the duties upon liquors and slaves, upon oath, a true manifest or account of all the slaves by him or them sold, the name and place of abode of every person buying the same, the respective prices at which each slave was sold, and how many of the said slaves, if any, remain then unsold; and also, a true account of the names of such buyers who have paid the duty, and the sums received from each person respectively, together with a list of such persons, if any, whose promisory notes shall be then due and unpaid; and shall then deliver to the treasurer all such notes as shall be then due, and payable; and shall have and receive the same salary upon such notes, as if the money was actually paid into the treasury: [Penalty for unpaid notes may be sued for.]

V. Provided always, That it shall and may be lawful for the treasurer to compound the said penalty, either before or after action brought.

VI. And be it further enacted, That so much of one clause of the said first recited act of assembly, that imposes a penalty of five pounds upon every buyer of a slave, who shall not pay the duty, and give an account of the slave or slaves by him purchased, to the collector of the said duty according to the directions of the said act; except as to such buyers who shall purchase any slave or slaves of any person not being an inhabitant of this colony, be, and is hereby repealed: but the same, as to such last mentioned buyers, shall be still in force. And the said first recited act of assembly, made in the fifth and sixth years of his majesty's reign, and the said act made in the tenth year of his majesty's reign, so far as the same concerns the said duty upon slaves, for so much of the said acts as are not repealed or altered by this act, shall continue, and be in force, from and after the first day of July, which shall be in the year of our lord, one thousand seven hundred and forty, for and during the term of four years from thence next following, and no longer: And that so much of the said acts as are contrary to any thing contained in this act, shall be, and is hereby repealed, and made void.[2]

101. Minutes of the House of Burgesses, 1744.[1]

October 18, 1744.

Mr. Ludwell moved for Leave to bring in a Bill, for reviving and continuing the Act, intituled, An Act, for laying an additional Duty

[2] In 1740 an act "for laying an additional Duty upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyer, for encouraging persons to enlist in his Majesty's service: And for preventing desertion", laid an additional duty of five per cent. on the amount of each purchase of slaves, which brought the total duty to ten per cent. This was to remain in force till July 1, 1744 (Hening, V. 92-94; Jour. of Burgesses, 1727-1740, pp. 416-434). In 1738 a special committee of the assembly had reported that the arrears in the payments of the duty on imported slaves between Apr. 25, 1736, and Oct. 25, 1738, amounted to £1399 8 s. Ibid., p. 384.

[101] [1] Jour. of Burgesses, 1742-1749, p. 139. For the consideration of the duty acts in 1742, see pp. 15-69. The act here referred to had lapsed July 1, 1744. A second attempt to restore the duty to ten per cent. was made in 1748, when in the course of renewing the act for laying a duty upon slaves, which had now been in existence since 1732, a motion was made that the committee framing the bill have power to receive a clause laying an additional five per cent. duty. The motion was lost. Ibid., pp. 275, 309, 319, 322-323.

upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyers; and for encouraging Persons to inlist in His Majesty's Service, and for preventing Desertion; for so much thereof as relates to the laying an additional Duty upon Slaves, to be paid by the Buyer: And the Question being put thereon? It passed in the Negative.

102. Francis Jerdone to William Buchanan, 1750.[1]

. . . What would you think of an African concern of a small vessel yearly to this place. I believe Capt. Archb'd Crawford would suit you for that business very well. I would be content to stand a small share on condition that I had the sales thereof, and I can see no reason why we may not expect the same success other people have, which to be sure is encouraging, else so many would not drive at it. There is not the least fear of selling here, for there is in general as many Purchasers as there is slaves imported, and the pay is always better than for any other commodity and without something of this sort I must be under the necessity of leaving this town, for my expenses are too great for my present wages. . . .

An Act for the encouragement and protection of the settlers upon the waters of the Mississippi.

III. Be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the passing of this act, there shall be levied and paid to our sovereign lord the king, his heirs and successors, for all slaves imported or brought into this colony and dominion for sale, either by land or water, from any part or place whatsoever, by the buyer or purchaser, after the rate of five per centum, on the amount of each respective purchase, over and above the duty already laid upon slaves imported as aforesaid; [2] which said additional duty shall be paid, col-

[102] [1] William and Mary Coll. Quar., XI. 157. Francis Jerdone came to Yorktown, Va., about 1746. Here he acted as factor for William Buchanan and William Hamilton, London merchants. That he accumulated considerable property in slaves is evidenced by his will made on July 10, 1770. Ibid., XI. 7.

[103] [1] Hening, VI. 417-420, February, 1754. A comment made by the editor of the Journals in reference to the passage of "an act for reviving the duty upon slaves, to be paid by the buyer, for the term therein mentioned", applies to much of the legislation regarding the duties on importation of slaves after 1750: "The fight over its passage arose from the fact that in enhancing the price of slaves the law would, it was seen, increase the difficulty experienced by men of small means in securing laborers for their farms. It was thus, to an extent, a fight between the rich and the poor." Jour. of Burgesses, 1752-1758, p. xiv.

[2] On Feb. 27, 1752, the five per cent. duty to be paid by the buyer, which had lapsed July 31, 1751, was revived for four years: "whereas the public debts contracted lected and accounted for, in such manner and form, and according to such rules, and under such penalties and forfeitures, as are mentioned, prescribed, and appointed, for the paying, collecting and accounting for the duty already raised and imposed upon slaves imported, by the several acts of Assembly now in force, and made for that purpose; and that every article, rule and clause contained in the said acts, concerning the paying, collecting and accounting for the said former duty shall be used, exercised, and put in practice, for paying, collecting and accounting for the said duty hereby imposed, as if the same articles, rules, and clauses were inserted in this act.[3] . . .

for his majesty's service, during the late war with France, and also for rebuilding the Capitol, are yet unpaid, and cannot be discharged without the aid of the duty laid by the aforesaid act, which hath, by experience, been found easy to the people here, and no ways burthensome to the traders in slaves" (Hening, VI. 217-221; Jour. of Burgesses, 1752-1758, pp. 16-97, passim). On Nov. 15, 1753, the committee on trade was instructed to bring in a bill continuing this act, which would expire Feb. 27, 1756. The continuing act received the assent of the governor on Dec. 19 (ibid., pp. 124, 131-135, 170). A study of the lists of arrivals in Virginia (post, no. 134) may give some notion of the effect of these duties; see also no. 105, n. 4.

[3] On May 10, 1754, Dinwiddie wrote to James Abercomby: "I now send You Copy of the Printed Journal of last Assembly; read seriously the Act for encouraging and (the) Protection of the Settlers upon the Waters of the Mississippi. You will observe several Things in it inconstitutional and derogatory to the prerogative of the Crown, particularly that Part wch gives the Power of the application of th Money by a Committee therein named, among whom are some of the Council, contrary to their Consent or Approbat'n." In February, 1754, an appropriation of £10,000 (to be raised by a tax on the importation of slaves, on wheel carriages, and on licenses for ordinaries) was made for the defense of such settlers (Va. Hist. Soc., Collections: Official Records of Robert Dinwiddie, I. 156). This act was renewed in May, 1755, to continue from Feb. 14, 1757, to Feb. 14, 1760 (Hening, VI. 468-470). It was again renewed in February, 1759, to continue for five years, which extended it to Feb. 14, 1765 (ibid., VII. 282; Jour. of Burgesses, 1758-1761, pp. 65, 95), and in May, 1763, for another five years, which carried it to February, 1770. Hening, VII. 639-640.

[104] [1] Hening, VI. 466. The term for which this act was passed was three years but apparently it continued in force until its repeal in May, 1760 (ibid., VII. 363). "An examination of the various measures of taxation resorted to in the progress of the war discloses an interesting example of the laying of a protective tariff under the guise of a measure designed to increase revenue, and an example of the selfishness fostered by such a system. In May, 1755, an additional duty of ten per cent. was laid on slaves imported into the Colony. The duties already imposed on them amounted to about ten per cent. All these duties were renewed in 1757, to continue for seven years. The rate was so heavy as to cause a marked falling off in the number of slaves imported, but the price of those in the Colony advanced, of course, to the extent of the duty imposed, with the result of increasing the wealth of the large land-holders and slave-holders and of rendering it more difficult for the small farmers to extend their operations. Earnest efforts were made by the latter to break the monopoly thus created, but it was not until 1760 that these efforts were crowned with success. In the May session of that year, the provision to take off the ten per cent. additional tax was attached as a rider to the bill for raising troops for the Cherokee Expedition. To the last those who profited by the duty fought for its retention" (Jour. of Burgesses, 1758-1761, p. xvi). The act of repeal read, "inasmuch as the same prevents the importation of slaves and thereby lessens the fund arising from the duties upon slaves" (Hening, VII. 363). See Dinwiddie Records, II. 86, for a discussion of the use to which the money was to be put.

against the insults and encroachments of the French; and for other purposes therein mentioned.

X. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the passing of this act, there shall be levied and paid to our sovereign lord the king, his heirs and successors, for all slaves imported, or brought into this colony and dominion for sale, either by land or water, from any part or place whatsoever, by the buyer, or purchaser, after the rate of ten per centum, on the amount of each respective purchase, over and above the several duties already laid on slaves, imported as aforesaid, by an act, or acts of Assembly, now subsisting, and also over and above the duty laid by an act, intituled, An act for the encouragement and protection of the settlers upon the waters of the Mississippi; made in the twenty-seventh year of his present majesty's reign, and continued this present session of Assembly, for the further term of three years, which said additional duty, shall be paid, collected, and accounted for in such manner and form, and according to such rules, and under such penalties and forfeitures as are mentioned, prescribed, and appointed for the paying, collecting, and accounting for the duties already raised and imposed upon slaves imported, by the several acts of Assembly now in force; and that every article, rule, and clause, contained in the said acts, concerning the paying, collecting and accounting for the said former duties, shall be used, exercised, and put in practice, for paying, collecting, and accounting for the said duty hereby imposed, as if the same articles, rules, and clauses were inserted in this act.

105. Peter Fontaine to Moses Fontaine, 1757.[1]

Dear Brother Moses: . . . Like Adam we are all apt to shift off the blame from ourselves and lay it upon others, how justly in our case you may judge. The negroes are enslaved by the negroes themselves before they are purchased by the masters of the ships who bring them here. It is to be sure at our choice whether we buy them or not, so this then is our crime, folly, or whatever you will please to call it. But, our Assembly, foreseeing the ill consequences of importing such numbers amongst us, hath often attempted to lay a duty upon them which would amount to a prohibition, such as ten or twenty pounds a head,[2] but no Governor dare pass such a law, having instructions to the contrary from the Board of Trade at home, By this means they are forced upon us, whether we will or will not. This plainly shows the African Company hath the advantage of the colonies, and may do as it pleases with the Ministry.[3]

[105] [1] James Fontaine, Memoirs of a Huguenot Family, pp. 351-352. On Mar. 2, 1756, Peter Fontaine had written, "The other evil you mention, our intestine enemies, our slaves, increase daily. . . . When our mother country shall vouchsafe to consider us a part of herself, she may perhaps not suffer such multitudes to be brought from Africa to pleasure a company, and overrun a dutiful colony" (ibid., pp. 347-348). The Reverend Peter Fontaine, rector of Westover parish, died in July, 1757.

[2] No attempt of this sort seems ever to have advanced far enough to become a matter of record. Not since 1728 had a specific duty, large or small, been introduced in the legislature. The ten per cent. duty proposed in 1748 was, as has been noted, defeated in the House of Burgesses before it was so much as incorporated in a bill.

Indeed, since we have been exhausted of our little stock of cash by the war, the importation has stopped; our poverty then is our best security. There is no more picking for their ravenous jaws upon bare bones, but should we begin to thrive they will be at the same again. All our taxes are now laid upon slaves and on Shippers of tobacco, which they wink at while we are in danger of being torn from them, but we durst not do it in time of peace, it being looked upon as the highest presumption to lay any burden upon trade.[4] This is our part of the grievance, but to live in Virginia without slaves is morally impossible. Before our troubles you could not hire a servant or slave for love or money, so that unless robust enough to cut wood, to go to mill, to work at the hoe, etc. you must starve, or board in some family where they both fleece and half starve you. There is no set price upon corn, wheat and provisions, so they take advantage of the necessities of strangers, who are thus obliged to purchase some slaves and land. This of course draws us all into the original sin and curse of the country of purchasing slaves, and this is the reason we have no merchants, traders, or artificers of any sort but what become planters in a short time.

A common laborer, white or black, if you can be so much favored as to hire one, is a shilling sterling or fifteen pence currency per day; a bungling carpenter two shillings or two shillings and six pence per day; besides diet and lodging. That is, for a lazy fellow to get wood and water, £19, 16. 3. current per annum; add to this seven or eight pounds more and you have a slave for life. . . .

106. Minutes of the House of Burgesses, 1759.[1]

Mr. Charles Carter, from the Committee of Propositions and Grievances, reported, That the Committee had had under their Con-

[3] It is to be remembered that the Royal African Company ceased to exist in 1752, and only a committee of merchants maintained an organization. The new, regulated company, could do no trading in its corporate capacity. See this work, II. 474-485.

[4] When this was written three statutes imposed duties on incoming negroes: the original act placing a five per cent. duty on them; the act first passed in 1754 for the protection of Mississippi settlers (ante, no. 103), which imposed a second five per cent. duty; and the act of May, 1755, to prevent French encroachments, which laid a further ten per cent. upon imports (ante, no. 104). The existence of this twenty per cent. imposition in 1757 tells nothing of the effect of such a duty in normal times. The years 1756-1760 were years of active war upon the seas. The commerce in slaves was of necessity checked and many slave cargoes captured. In addition, Virginia's tobacco crop of 1756 was a poor one, as was that of 1758 also. See May 15, 1756, Francis Jerdone to Messrs. Alex. Speirs and Hugh Brown, *Wm. and Mary Coll. sideration divers Propositions, from Several Counties, to them referred, and had come to several Resolutions thereupon. . . . Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That that Part of the Petition from the County of King George, praying that the Duty on Slaves may be lessened is reasonable.[2] . . .

March 30, 1759.

A Motion was made for Leave to bring in a Bill To oblige the Importers of Slaves, for their own Use, to pay a Duty; and the Question being put thereupon, It passed in the Negative.[3]

107. Act for laying a Duty on Slaves, 1759.[1]

An Act to oblige the persons bringing slaves into this colony from Maryland, Carolina, and the West-Indies, for their own use, to pay a duty.

I. Whereas great numbers of negro and other slaves, imported to the provinces of Maryland, North-Carolina, and other places in America, have been there brought by the inhabitants of this colony, and from thence transported hither, whereby not only the payment of the duties on slaves has been evaded, but the duties imposed by the laws of those countries have been born by our people; for prevention whereof, Be it enacted, by the Lieutenant-Governor, Council, and Burgesses, of this present General Assembly, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this act, there shall be paid to our sovereign lord the king, his heirs and successors, for all slaves imported or brought into this colony and dominion from Maryland, North-Carolina, or any other place in America, by the owner or importer thereof, after the rate of twenty per centum on the amount of each respective purchase, really and bona fide made, by such owner or importer, in such province or other place in America; to be applied towards discharging the publick debts of this colony, and to such other publick uses as the general assembly shall from time to time direct.[2] . . .

[2] The colony had placed an additional ten per cent. duty on slaves in 1757, to take effect July 9, 1758, and to be in effect seven years, though it was actually repealed in March, 1761, as being "found very inconvenient" (Hening, VII. 81, ch. 1, sect. 22, and 383, ch. 1, sect. 6). In spite of the favorable report of the committee the House rejected as much of the petition as requested that the duty on slaves be lessened. Jour. of Burgesses, 1758-1761, p. 96.

[3] The same motion was carried on Nov. 8, 1759, and a bill framed. Ibid., pp. 141-146.

[107] [1] Hening, VII, 338; see Leg. Jour. of Council, III. 1228 On Dec. 1, 1759, Francis Fauquier, lieutenant governor, wrote to the Board of Trade, "The Assembly broke upon the 21st Novr. after having passed . . . an Act to prevent Frauds on Negro duties". In the same session a bill was introduced to amend the duties on negroes and one to lessen them. The former was sent to the council on Nov. 15 but was not passed; the latter never reached the council. Jour. of Burgesses, 1758-1761, pp. 141-152, passim, and 282.

[2] This was to be effective until Apr. 20, 1767. In the autumn of 1766 it was renewed for another three years and two years later it was again extended for three years. Hening, VIII. 191-192, 336-337; Jour. of Burgesses, 1765-1769, pp. 39, 42, 46, 47, 52; Jour. of Council, III. 1356.

108. Lieutenant Governor Fauquier to the Board of Trade, 1760.[1]

W'msburgh, June 2d, 1760.

My Lords, . . . At the end of the supply Bill the House of Burgesses added a Clause to encrease the duty arising by the importation of slaves, by reducing it to ten per cent instead of twenty, which was the method I most approved in the late Act relative thereto of which I wrote yr Lord'pps a full account in my letter of the 17th of Decembr. by the Deliverance, Capt. Whyte, who I hope, is safely arrived, tho' we have not heard of her. She carried the Box of public papers and Acts.

The incertitude of the proceedings of the General Assembly of this Colony, has struck me on many occasions and seems to be so inherent in the nature of the Members, as to be characteristic of the People. This Act was passed this Session in the lower House, but by a single voice, on account of this Clause; and it is apprehended will occasion a Battle in the next Session whenever the assembly meets again; for the contest on this occasion is between the old Settlers, who have bred great quantity of Slaves, and would make a Monopoly of them by a duty which they hoped would amount to a prohibition; and the rising Generation who want Slaves, and don't care to pay the Monopolists for them at the price they have lately bore, which was exceedingly high.

These reasons your Lord'pps may guess are not urged in the arguments on either side; but, I believe are the true foundation of the Squabble. . . .

109. Lieutenant Governor Fauquier to the Board of Trade, 1760.[1]

W'msburgh, Septr. 1, 1760.

My Lords, . . . The Box of public papers and Acts, among which was the Negro Act, was ship'd on board the Deliverance Captn. White who was lost on the Coast of France, the Duplicate of those acts went by the Jacob and Johanna, Captn. Clarkson, who sailed the latter end of May, who I hope is safely arrived and that your Lord'pps are in possession of the Acts of that session.

I am truly sensible that a Governor or Commander in Chief is not to ask the advice of the Council assigned him by His Maj'ty, whether he shall obey the Instructions of His Maj'ty; but in regard to this Act, it was attended with some particular circumstances, which induced me to take that step, from which I thought I ought not afterwards to recede. The Act did not lay any new duty; if it had, I should most certainly have refused it without taking advice upon it; but it only provided against a Fraud daily practiced to avoid a duty, originally laid and by other subsequent Acts continued long before I arrived in the Colony. But the Act, in express terms (which could not be avoided, to give it its intended force and effect) contradicted the Instruction; in this situation and under these circumstances I applyed to the Council for their advice what I should do? who, all but one, were unanimous that the sense and spirit was by no means broke in upon, as no new duty was imposed by the Act; as your Lord'pps will find by their reasons inserted in the minutes of the Council and by a Duplicate I sent as soon as I heard of the loss of the Deliverance. I have been unfortunate, for duplicates of all these papers, were sent by the New York Packet which was taken by the French and Ransomed; but the papers were all thrown overboard and lost; however there is now an end of this affair, as in the next Session, this Act was repealed and the duty lowered from twenty to ten per cent, to answer the same purpose as was intended by the former Act; vizt. to encrease the money coming into the Treasury from the said duty. . . .

110. Act repealing a Duty on Slaves, 1761.[1]

An Act for recruiting and further continuing the regiment in the service of this colony, and for other purposes therein mentioned.

VI. And whereas by an act of the general assembly made in the thirtieth year of the reign of his late majesty king George the second, entitled, An Act for granting an aid to his majesty, for the better protection of this colony, and for other purposes therein mentioned, an additional duty of ten per centum was imposed on all slaves imported or brought into this colony for sale, either by land or water, from any port or place whatsoever, from and after the ninth day of July one thousand seven hundred and fifty-eight, during the term of seven years, to be paid by the buyer or purchasers thereof on the amount of each respective purchase, over and above the several duties laid on slaves imported as aforesaid by any act or acts of assembly then subsisting, which said additional duty of ten per centum hath been found very inconvenient: Be it therefore further enacted by the

[2] On Sept. 15, 1761, Fauquier wrote to the Board of Trade: "It may be necessary for me to explain the motive for the last Clause of the Chapter 1st intituled: 'An act for the Recruiting and further continuing the Regiments in the service of this Colony, and for other purposes therein mentioned'. In the year 1755 there was an Act for laying an additional duty of ten per cent on the importation of Negroes to be paid by the Buyer; in the year 1758 this Act was continued in force for a longer time, than the act of 1755 provided for; when they determined to take off this additional duty, they by mistake repealed the Act of 1755 which laid the duty but was expired, instead of the Act of 1758 which continued it, so that this Clause became necessary, and was thought not an improper Rider to a money Bill." Jour. of Burgesses, 1758-1761, pp. 296-297.

113. Negroes sold in Virginia, 1765.

Norfolk July 26th, 1765.

Sir, I am informed by Mr. Thomas Newton that it is represented to you by some in the Northern Government, that I Clandestinly or by force carried off several free men from the Coast of Africa at the time I was there in his Vessel. It gives me much concern that I should be accused of an Action that I shoud Condemn in another, and that I did bring off one man which I believe might be free born I readily own, and I at the same time I took him on Board was really to serve the Person without advantage to my Owner. One Blackney of the Brigantine Catherina from the Island St. Thomas's had a man left on Board him as a pawn, and as he was going off the Coast before I could leave it which was about the first of May I gave him two Slaves for him, and as he pretended to be one of great Credit I did not in the least doubt but the Person who left him as a pledge for Goods received woud redeem him before I left the Coast, and that I did use my utmost Endeavours to get him of my hands is a real truth, but whether I was imposed on by the Captain, or that his friends wanted to get clear of him I am yet ignorant off. Being in great distress for want of Provisions from the ill Treatment I received from some of the Natives who took from me sundry Merchandize and coud get nothing from them I made my Case known to King Peter who sent his son young Peter, second King of that Country on Board to see further into the particulars I had informed

[2] The writer expresses the hope that a bounty on hemp will turn the planters from tobacco, and Virginia may again enjoy the "halcyon days she knew 20 Years ago, when they lived in peace and plenty and feared a Debt in England as the worst of calamitys". Debts received much attention in the correspondence of Virginia merchants and British principals during the next few years. See letters of William Allason to various English merchants (post, no. 134, n. 55, and Richmond Coll. Hist. Papers, II. 126-128, 131, 135, 138-141). Of the Virginia currency Allason wrote to his brother in 1763: "What few [dollars] there is circulating this way is sold currently for 6/8 Virginia Cur'y tho by the Laws of the Colony they are not to pass for more than 5/9 and even at the high price they are picked up by those who are either Traveling to Maryland or Pennsylvania or have payment to make there" (ibid., p. 128). To Robert Bogle, London, he wrote: "Our Exchange seems to be falling for instead of 62½ wch was current Bills now bought a 60 pct and tis imagined they'll be much lower against April General Court" (ibid., p. 129). The letters of Richard Corbin also cast some light on the troubles of this period. He attributes the difficulties of the planters to their own extravagances, caused in part at least by excessive issues of paper money. Va. Mag. of Hist., XXX. 82.

Sir, Your favour of the 22d. Instant I recd., also Mr. Ward's Letter and Mr. Owin Morris's Deposition setting forth that Capt: Charles Thomas brought from the Coast of Guinea several free Negroes, Capt: Thomas sailed from Virginia in Sloop belonging to Messrs. Capt: Thomas is in Town shall desire him to inform your Honour more fully of the Charge against him, we shall be very sorry that any person or Persons should suffer by his disconduct.

W'MSBURGH, Augst. 8th, 1765.

Sir, Soon after the Receipt of your Letter, some affairs of this Colony required that I should call a full Council; at that board your Letter and the Deposition of Mr. Morris were read and considered. Some of the Members said that they knew Captain Thomas, who had been long in the Employ of Mr. Newton of Norfolk and that he was a Man who had always bore a very fair Character, and they were persuaded if I would lay the whole Affair before Mr. Newton that he would make enquiry into it, and that from the Knowledge they had of that Gentlemans Integrity, I might safely depend on what Information he should give me. I accordingly sent your Letter and other papers to Mr. Newton: his, and Captain Thomas's Answers to them, and my Letter sent with them, I have inclosed to you for your full Satisfaction, as to what has been transacted in this matter: and shall only observe upon them, that to me there appears an air of Truth and Candor throughout Captn. Thomas's Narrative, which is descriptive of the Character given him by some Gentlemen of the Council. I do not perceive that I can go any further in this Business on the footing it now stands; for tho' Mr. Morris's Information may be a ground work for a prosecution it must fall for want of Evidence. If you think his Answer not satisfactory you may be assured I shall readily give you all the assistance I can legally do, to bring this Affair into daylight, It being a Duty I owe to his Majesty and consequently to all his Subjects.

I. May it please your most excellent majesty, we your majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects the representatives of your people in your colony and dominion of Virginia, now met in general assembly, taking into our serious consideration the exigencies of your government here, do humbly represent to your majesty that no other duty can be laid upon our import or export without oppressing your subjects, than an additional duty upon slaves imported or brought into this colony, to be paid by the buyers, agreeable to your royal instructions to your lieutenant-governor: We therefore humbly beseech your majesty that it may be enacted; And be it enacted by the Lieutenant-Governor, Council, and Burgesses, of this present General Assembly, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, [114] [1] Hening, VIII. 237-238. The act of 1752, renewed in 1759 and to expire on Apr. 20, 1767, was brought forward on Nov. 27, 1766, but was defeated in the House of Burgesses on Dec. 1. Three days later a substitute bill was presented, to continue and amend the act reviving a duty on slaves (Jour. of Burgesses, 1765-1769, pp. 39-75, passim; Hening, VIII. 190). In January, 1766, the Gentleman's Magazine (p. 45) thus referred to the slave trade: "Petitions have been presented from the principal merchants etc. of Bristol, York, Liverpoole, and other trading places, complaining of the hardships they labour under by the great decay of trade to the American colonies, and to the coast of Africa." Despite the English protests Mr. Henry Lee presented to the house on Mar. 28, 1767, the act here printed, which was promptly passed by both houses of the assembly with a direction to the committee of correspondence to direct the Virginia agent to use his endeavors to procure his Majesty's assent to the bill. This is the act which was disallowed on Aug. 12, 1768. Acts P. C. C., V. 164-165.

That from and after the passing of this act there shall be levied and paid to our sovereign lord the king, his heirs and successors, for all slaves imported or brought into this colony for sale, either by land or water from any port or place whatsoever, by the buyer or purchaser, after the rate of ten per centum on the amount of each respective purchase over and above the several duties already laid upon slaves imported or brought into this colony, as aforesaid, by any act or acts of assembly now subsisting in this colony. . . .

II. And be it further enacted, That the said duty is hereby appropriated, and shall be applied for the lessening the levy by the poll, and to and for such other use and uses as the general assembly from time to time shall direct and appoint.

III. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That the execution of this act shall be suspended until his majesty's approbation thereof shall be obtained, and that from and after obtaining the same, this act shall continue and be in force for and during the term of seven years, and no longer.[2]

115. Concerning Acts for laying Duties on Slaves, 1770-1772.

[Petition of the Merchants of Liverpool, 1770.][1]

To the Right Honorable and Honorable the Lords of Trade and Plantations

The Humble petition of the Merchants of Liverpool trading to Africa, and the Colonies whose names are subscribed, Sheweth, That your Petitioners are informed that the Assembly of Virginia have lately passed an Act to lay an additional duty of 5 per cent on all Negroes imported there from Africa.[2]

That your Petitioners are fully satisfied that that Act passed with no general view to the Public good but to the Private Emolument

[2] Since this was to be suspended until the king's consent had been given, it is probable that the act of 1769 providing for an additional duty of ten per cent. was merely a reiteration of this measure (Hening, VIII. 337-338). On Nov. 11, 1769, the Burgesses resolved that the duty act which was to expire Apr. 20, 1770, ought to be renewed, as well as the act laying a duty on slaves brought in from other colonies. Two bills were introduced and referred to committee to be welded into one, which was done and the resulting measure returned to the Burgesses (Jour. of Burgesses, 1766-1769, pp. 249, 263, 275, 289, 302, 352, 353; Hening, VIII. 336-337). An act to take effect Feb. 14, 1770, and to be in force till Oct. 25, 1771, was also passed in this session, laying a five per cent. duty for the "better support of contingent charges of government". Ibid., pp. 342-348.

[115] [1] Sparks MSS., no. 43, vol. IV., p. 85. The members of Parliament from Bristol were instructed on Feb. 6, 1770, to oppose a Virginia duty act laying a ten per cent. duty ("Calendar of the Records of the Merchant Venturers", II. 177). On Nov. 23, 1770, the Board of Trade sent a representation to the king on two Virginia acts. Va. Mag. of Hist., XVII. 217.

[2] This probably refers to the act laying a five per cent. duty which was passed in 1769, to go into effect after Feb. 14, 1770. Hening, VIII. 342-348.

only of the Law makers whose Estates (the most considerable in that Country) would rise in value for the present in proportion as the number of Negroes is diminished which must inevitably be the case was this Bill to pass into a Law.

That there is now and has been for several years past a Duty of ten per cent upon all Slaves imported into the Colony of Virginia which though nominally paid by the purchaser of such slaves is in reality a Tax on the Merchant Importer and of course a great discouragement to this valuable branch of Commerce.

That it is needless to inform your Lordship of what vast consequence the Trade to Africa is to the Merchants and Manufacturers of this Kingdom and with respect to Virginia or any other of the adjacent Colonies on the Continent of North America nothing can be more manifest than that the cultivation of Tobacco Corn and Hemp must encrease in proportion to the number of hands employed for that purpose the two former of which Commodities are purchased principally by foreigners and are a real source of wealth both to this Kingdom and the Colonies.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly hope for your Lordships countenance and support in preventing the sinister views of Selfish men from interfering with and opposing the general good.[3]

[Richard Jackson to the Board of Trade, 1770.][4]

July 18th, 1770.

An act for laying additional Duty upon Slaves imported into this Colony. As this Act does not extend to felons transported from Great Britain I see no objection to it in point of Law, yet it rests with Your Lordships to determine how far it may be expedient in point of Commercial policy to approve so high a Duty on the importation of a considerable article of British Commerce. It is true the Duty is payable by the purchaser but this Provision is well known to be a mere delusion as all such Duties must in the end be paid by the Purchaser but being paid by the purchaser raise the price and thereby may probably lessen the demand. This too is an additional Duty and therefore the more burthensome but on the other hand perhaps the increase of Negroes by importation in a Country where the present Stock rather increases by procreation may perhaps be not improperly checked especially at a time when there is a new vent opened (the ceded Island)[5] which it is of so much importance should be speedily and plentifully supplied.[6]

[Lord Dunmore to the Earl of Hillsborough, 1772.][7]

WILLIAMSBURG 1st May 1772.

My Lord, The Acts of Assembly, Journals etc. are not yet ready for Sending, but I transmit to your Lordship an Address of the house of Burgesses, in their last Sitting, to his Majesty praying that the legislature of this Colony may not be restrained from passing a law which, as it appears to me, is evidently calculated for the good of this Country, and, with it, the interest of Great Britain. I hope your Lordship will present the said Address, and endeavour to dispose His Majesty to acquiesce in the desire of a Country whose loyalty and affection have been allway Conspicuous, and whose importance to the Mother Country, gives them a title to expect to be considered before those trading people in England, whose particular interest it may be to oppose this request.

The people of this Colony are very anxious for an Act to lay an additional duty upon the importation of Slaves, in order to restrain the introduction of people, the Number of whom, already in the Colony, gives them Just cause to apprehend the most dangerous Consequence therefrom, and therefore makes it necessary that they should fall upon means, not only of preventing their increase, but, also of lessening their number, and the interest of the Country would Manifestly require the total expulsion of them.

At present the Negroes are double the Number of white people in this Colony,[8] which, by the natural increase, and the great addition of new imported ones every year, is Sufficient to allarm not only [5] The reference is probably to Grenada, since its demand for labor greatly surpassed that of the other ceded islands, Dominica, St. Vincent, and Tobago.

[6] A year later (July 5, 1771) William Allason wrote to Thomas B. Martin: "No negroes of any kind offering for sale, by which it has not been in my power to execute your order" (Richmond Coll. Hist. Papers, II. 146). We know that Virginia was still considered a possible market, for in April, 1771, the Vernons of Newport had directed Capt. John Duncan to deliver his cargo of 71 negroes to Col. John Thornton at Rappahannock (this work, III. 248). The decline in the amount of the trade was not peculiar to Virginia: "By various Accounts from the Coast of Africa, and the West Indies we are informed that the Slave Trade is so fallen off that it is imagined some very extraordinary Event cannot be far distant in Favour of a wretched Race of Individuals whose Complexion have, for Centuries exposed them to all the Severities and Indignities of Servitude, that alone terminate with their Lives." Va. Gazette, Sept. 17, 1771.

[7] C. O. 5: 1350, f. 91; see Hist. MSS. Comm., Fourteenth Report, pt. X., Dartmouth Papers, II. 113. The Earl of Dunmore was governor in chief of Virginia from July, 1771, to June, 1775.

[8] This was in all probability a highly exaggerated estimate of the number of negroes in Virginia. One statement for 1770 gives 187,606 negroes in a total population of 447,008 (Greene and Harrington, American Population before the Federal Census of 1790, 1932, p. 141). For estimates at various dates see Gray, Agriculture in the Southern United States, II. 1025.

this Colony, but all the Colonies of America; but Supposing that, by unremitted observance of their conduct, a rigorous exertion of the Laws relating to them, and the most examplary punishment of all the refractory (a lamentable necessity for a Country to be under) they might so far Suceed as ever to prevent any insurrection from being Contrived among them, yet in case of a War (which may probably often happen) with Spain, or indeed any other power, that might make an attack upon this Colony, the people, with great reason, tremble at the facility that an enemy would find in procuring such a body of men; attached by no tye to their Masters or to the Country, on the contrary it is natural to Suppose their Condition must inspire them with an aversion to both, and therefore are ready to join the first that would encourage them to revenge themselves; by which means a Conquest of this Country would inevitably be effected in a very Short time; it cannot therefore but be a Matter of the greatest concern, to find proper means of averting a Calamity so alarming.

DUNMORE.

[Address of the House of Burgesses to the King, 1772.][9]

To the King's most excellent Majesty, The humble Address of the House of Burgesses of Virginia.

Most Gracious Sovereign, We your Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects the Burgesses of Virginia, now met in General Assembly, beg Leave with all Humility to approach your Royal Presence.

The many Instances of your Majesty's benevolent Intentions and most gracious Disposition to promote the Prosperity and Happiness of your Subjects in the Colonies, encourage us to look up to the Throne, and implore your Majesty's paternal Assistance in averting a Calamity of a most alarming Nature.

The Importation of Slaves into the Colonies from the Coast of Africa hath long been considered as a Trade of great Inhumanity, and, under its present Encouragement, we have too much reason to fear will endanger the very Existence of your Majesty's American Dominions.

We are sensible that some of your Majesty's Subjects in Great Britain may reap Emoluments from this Sort of Traffick, but when we consider that it greatly retards the Settlement of the Colonies with more useful Inhabitants, and may in Time, have the most destructive Influence, we presume to hope that the Interest of a few will be disregarded when placed in Competition with the Security and Happiness of such Numbers of your Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects.

Deeply impressed with these Sentiments, we most humbly beseech your Majesty to remove all those Restraints on your Majesty's Governors of this Colony which inhibit their assenting to such Laws, as might check so very pernicious a Commerce.

Your Majesty's ancient Colony and Dominion of Virginia hath at all Times and upon every Occasion been entirely devoted to your Majesty's sacred Person and Government, and we cannot forego this Opportunity of renewing those Assurances of the truest Loyalty and warmest Affection, which we have so often, with the greatest Sincerity, given to the Best of Kings, whose Wisdom and Goodness we esteem the surest Pledges of the Happiness of all his people.[10]

[Order in Council.][11]

[Orders in accordance with a Committee report of 6 Dec., agreeing with a Board of Trade representation of 23 Nov., referred to them on 26 Nov., about two Virginia acts of Dec., 1769, (a) for laying an additional duty upon slaves imported into this colony, and (b) for the better support of the contingent charges of government.

The Board of Trade represented that by these two acts, the first of which has a suspending clause,] Additional Duties are Imposed upon the Importation of Negroes to the Amount of fifteen per Cent. upon every purchase (payable by the purchaser) over and above all other Duties upon Slaves imported, laid by former Laws now in force; And that these Duties which amount in the whole to twenty five per Cent. upon every purchase must have the effect and are they apprehend, intended to operate as an entire prohibition to the importation of Slaves into Virginia; [that the strongest reasons had been given for disallowing an act of 1728 for laying a duty on slaves imported into Virginia (cf. Acts of the Privy Council, III, pp, 64-5) :] that in the Year 1731 it was thought fit to allow the Governors of Your Majestys Colonies, to consent to Laws laying moderate Duties upon Negroes imported, provided such Duties were paid by the purchaser, and not by the Importer, and they humbly apprehend that it was under the Sanction of that permission, that Laws in the Colony of Virginia, subsequent to that period, laying Duties of ten per Cent. upon Negroes Imported have been suffered to pass, and therefore both from principle and experience the said Lords Commissioners might well entertain a Doubt of the propriety of the policy, on which that permission was grounded, and are able to show that the Distinction made between Duties paid by the Importer and the purchaser is fallacious, and that in fact the operation of either mode is the same; Yet they should not have suffered that Doubt and opinion to have now opposed themselves to a practice, that has without Complaint from the Merchants of this Kingdom universally prevailled in all Colonies which Import Slaves, had those Duties in the present Case, been confined within the Limits of Moderation; But when the privilege of laying moderate Duties payable by the purchaser is extended so far, as to have the effect of a prohibition, the objections made to the practice in the Year 1729 do stand forth in their full force and extent; For which Reason and for as much as the Merchants of Bristol Liverpool and Lancaster trading to Affrica, have both by their Representatives and by Memorials stated to the said Lords Commissioners the prejudice which these Laws will be of to the Trade and Commerce of those ports, it becomes their Duty, agreeing with them in opinion humbly to propose, that the first mentioned of these Laws may be disallowed; permitting the other which is made to continue only to October 1771, and has also reference to other matters which will require a different consideration, to expire by it's own Limitation; And that Your Majesty's Governor may be Instructed that he do not for the future give his assent without Your Majesty's permission first obtained to any Law, by which the Duties of ten per Cent. upon Slaves imported into that Colony imposed by former Laws shall be increased.

[10] On Dec. 19 an order of a committee of the Council referred this address to the Board of Trade, where it was read Jan. 25, 1773. Hist. MSS. Comm., Fourteenth Report, pt. X., Dartmouth Papers, II. 113, 131.

[On 4 Dec. the Committee ordered the instruction to be prepared (P.R.). It forbade the continuation of the act of Nov., 1769, and the enacting of any measure) by which the Importation of Slaves shall be in any respect prohibited or obstructed.

[Reference to the Committee, and by them on 19 Dec. [1772] to the Board of Trade, of a letter from Lord Dunmore to Lord Hillsborough, with an] Address of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, humbly beseeching His Majesty to remove all restraints upon His Majesty's Governors of that Colony, which inhibit their assenting to such Laws as might check the Importation of Slaves into the Colonies from the Coast of Africa, The Importation of such Slaves having long been considered as a Trade of great Inhumanity and under its present Encouragement, they have too much reason to fear will endanger the very Existence of His Majesty's American Dominions.

The Association entered into last Friday the 22d instant, by the Gentlemen of the House of Burgesses and the Body of Merchants, assembled in this city. . . .

[2] This closely resembles the non-importation agreement of the preceding year. The governor on May 17, 1769, had dissolved the Burgesses, whereupon the "late representatives" met at the house of Anthony Hay, elected Peyton Randolph moderator, and agreed, "Fifthly, That they will not import any Slaves or purchase any imported, after the First day of November next, until the said Acts of Parliament are repealed" (Jour. of Burgesses, 1766-1769, pp. xxxix-xli). Even before the agreement went into effect Virginia importation had declined: "Our trade here is very dull for want of Currency and consequently want of Payments. Our produce you know will seldom command money but [at] a considerable loss. The assotiators here are not so numerous as with you the merchants being chiefly Factors, who imports Goods as formerly no notice taken of it." On Sept. 1 he added: "Mr. Hunter has not yet made any settlement relative to Capt. Ward's Guinea concerns. Assure Capt. Ward that he will do all he can to render him service in that disagreeable partnership." On July 5, 1770, he again wrote to Backhouse: "Inclosed you have Copy of our Acct. Quinney for, Mr. James Hunter is now with me, and has made out his acct. of the African Commn. with Cap. Ward." Ibid., XVII. 21, XXI. 85.

118. Act for laying a Duty on Slaves, 1772.[1]

An act for continuing and amending several acts, and reviving one act, for laying duties upon slaves imported.

I. Whereas an act of assembly, made in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of his late majesty king George the second, intituled An act for reviving the duty upon slaves to be paid by the buyers, for the term therein mentioned; and one other act of assembly, made in the thirty-third year of his said late majesty's reign intituled An act to oblige persons bringing slaves into this colony from Maryland, Carolina, and the West-Indies, for their own use, to pay a duty; which several acts have, from time to time, been continued by several other acts, will expire on the twentieth day of April, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-three, and it is found expedient and necessary that the said acts should be further continued and amended: And whereas an additional duty of five per cent. was laid on all slaves imported into this colony, by an act passed in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of his late majesty king George the second, intituled An act for the encouragement of the settlers upon the waters of the Mississippi, which duty was continued for five years, by an act passed in the third year of the reign of his present majesty, and was afterwards revived by an act, passed in the tenth year of his present majesty, intituled An act for the better support of the contingent charges of government, which expired on the twenty-fifth of October last, and it is necessary that the same should be revived: Be it therefore enacted, by the Governor, Council, and Burgesses, of this present General Assembly, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, That so much of the said act, intituled An act for the better support of the contingent charges of government, as relates to the imposing, collecting, and accounting for, the said additional duty of five per cent. upon slaves shall be revived, and that it shall continue and be in force, from and after the twentieth of April next, for and during the space of six years, and from thence to the end of the next session of assembly.

II. And whereas it is represented to this present general assembly, that many frauds have been committed by some importers of slaves into this colony, who do not enter them with the proper officers at all, and by others who make sham and pretended sales of slaves, by exposing them at public auction, in large numbers, the importer or owner still retaining the real property, and afterwards disposing of such slaves at advanced prices, whereby the country, in some instances, is totally deprived of the duty, and, in others, the said duty is greatly lessened: For remedy whereof, Be it enacted, by the Gov-

And every naval officer, and county court clerk, shall, within two months after such list or manifest is delivered to him, transmit an exact copy thereof to the treasurer of this colony for the time being; and every officer or clerk failing herein, shall forfeit and pay the sum of ten pounds, to be recovered with costs of suit by the said treasurer, in his own name, but for the use of the public, by action of debt in any court of record.

III. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That for every slave imported into this colony from Maryland, Carolina, and the West-Indies, or any other part of America, except such as are excepted by the said act, there shall, from and after the said tenth day of June next, be paid to our sovereign lord the king, his heirs, and successors, in lieu of the twenty per cent. ad valorem, a duty of five pounds by the head, to be collected and paid to the treasurer of this colony for the time being, and by him accounted for in the same manner as by the said recited acts is directed.

IV. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That so much of the said recited acts of assembly, and every clause and article thereof as is not altered by this act, together with this act, shall continue and be in force from and after the twentieth day of April, which shall be in the year of our lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-three, for and during the term of five years, and from thence to the end of the next session of general assembly.

120. ROBERT PLEASANTS TO ANTHONY BENEZET, 1774.[1]

Dear friend. . . . I think the Phisition has handled the subject of Slavery in a masterly manner, altho I suppose he may have very little reason to expect to share with his antagonist the thanks of the African Company, but let that be as it may, he will receive what I expect will be more agreeable to him, the approbation of Judicious sencible men. I highly approved and sincerely wish the several petitions to the King and Parliament may have the desired effect, but I fear there is not virtue and resolution sufficient to forgo or withstand a present (tho false and imaginary) interest in the continuation of a wicked and destructive Trade. I have sent one of the papers containing the address and advice to those Mercht., to the Printer, and doubt not they will shortly appear in our Gazette and as it seems the attempts of our Assembly to prohibit the further Importation of Slaves by an imposition of high Dutys, has been frustrated (as I find is the case in N. york) does thou not think that Acts of the Colonys making all free after a certain term of Servitude like other foreigners taking place at a future period so as that all concerned in the Trade might have notice of such law, would not be (when accompanied with pertinent reasons) more effectually to put an end to it, and be more likely to be approved by the King and Council than a prohibition by Duties for I have been told our Governor (and its not unlikely others also) has instructions to pass no such laws. I just drop this hint for thy consideration. . . .

[August 1, 1774.]

At a very full Meeting of Delegates from the different Counties in the Colony and Dominion of Virginia, begun in Williamsburg the first day of August, in the year of our Lord 1774, and continued by several adjournments to Saturday, the 6th of the same month, the following Association was unanimously resolved upon and agreed to: . . .

2d. We will neither ourselves import, nor purchase any slave or slaves imported by any other person, after the first day of November next, either from Africa, the West Indies, or any other place.[2]

122. Proceedings of the Committee of Correspondence, 1775.[1]

Committee Chamber, Norfolk, March 6, 1775.

Trusting to your sure resentment against the enemies of your Country, we, the Committee, elected by ballot for the Borough of Norfolk, hold up for your just indignation Mr. John Brown, Merchant, of this place. We are fully sensible of the great caution with which publick censure should be inflicted, and, at all times, are heartily disposed to accomplish the great design of the Association by the gentle methods of reason and persuasion. But an unhappy proneness to unmanly equivocation, which has so much distinguished Mr. Brown, and for which he has, in more than one instance, been censured by the voice of the people, added to the present manifest discovery of his secret and most direct attempt to defeat the measures of the Congress, in the case now before us, and of some very Hist. Papers*, II. 156). On Sept. 5, the Virginia delegates to the Continental Congress presented a "Summary View of the Rights of British America" which contained the words: "For the most trifling reasons, and sometimes for no conceivable reason at all, his majesty has rejected laws of the most salutary tendency. The abolition of domestic slavery is the great object of desire in those colonies, where it was unhappily introduced in their infant state. But previous to the enfranchisement of the slaves we have, it is necessary to exclude all further importations from Africa; yet our repeated attempts to effect this by prohibitions and by imposing duties which might amount to a prohibition have been hitherto defeated by his majesty's negative: Thus preferring the immediate advantages of a few African [British, in later copy] corsairs to the lasting interests of the American states, and to the rights of human nature deeply wounded by this infamous practice." Writings of Thomas Jefferson (ed. Ford), I. 440.

[122] [1] Force, Am. Arch., fourth ser., II. 33-34.

unjustifiable steps taken to conceal his disingenuous conduct, hath precluded us from the milder methods we would wish to adopt, and compelled us to give the publick the following narration: On Thursday, the 2d of March, this Committee were informed of the arrival of The Brig Fanny, Captain Watson, with a number of Slaves for Mr. Brown; and, upon inquiry, it appeared that they were shipped from Jamaica as his property, and on his account; that he had taken great pains to conceal their arrival from the knowledge of the Committee; and that the shipper of the Slaves, Mr. Brown's correspondents, and the Captain of the Vessel, were all fully apprized of the Continental prohibition against that article. These circumstances induced a suspicion that Mr. Brown had given orders for the Slaves himself, which he positively denied, asserting that he had expressly forbidden his correspondents to send any, as being contrary to the Association, for the truth of which he appealed to his own letter-book. The Secretary being desired, at the request of Mr. Brown, to attend him to inspect the orders said to have been given, reported that he had had some slight and hasty glances at letters written between the middle of December and beginning of January, and was sorry to say he had seen one directed to Mr. Henderson, and another to Mr. Livingston, both of the date of December, and a third to Messrs. Campbells, of the first of January, all containing positive and particular orders for remittances to be made him in Slaves; at the same time hinting the necessity of secrecy, as it is an article, he writes, he could not avowedly deal in. The Secretary also reported, that he had seen a postscript, written a few days after the determination of this Committee, directing the return of a Slave imported from Antigua, in which postscript Mr. Brown writes his correspondent to send him no more than two Negro lads, as it would be dangerous to sell them here. But his orders to his other correspondents appear to have been so positive that they were complied with, notwithstanding his friend writes him that good Slaves would sell to more advantage in Jamaica than in Virginia. From the whole of this transaction, therefore, we, the Committee for Norfolk Borough, do give it as our unanimous opinion, that the said John Brown has wilfully and perversely violated the Continental Association, to which he had, with his own hand, subscribed obedience; and that agreeable to the Eleventh Article we are bound "forthwith to publish the truth of the case, to the end that all such foes to the rights of British America may be publickly known, and universally contemned, as the enemies of American Liberty, and that every person may henceforth break off all dealings with him."

123. ACT FOR PREVENTING THE FURTHER IMPORTATION OF SLAVES, 1778.[1]

WILLIAMSBURG, October, 1778.

I. For preventing the farther importation of slaves into this Commonwealth, Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That from and after the passing of this act no slave or slaves shall hereafter be imported into this commonwealth by sea or land, nor shall any slaves so imported be sold or bought by any person whatsoever.

II. Every person hereafter importing slaves into this commonwealth contrary to this act shall forfeit and pay the sum of one thousand pounds for every slave so imported, and every person selling or buying any such slaves shall in like manner forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred pounds for every slave so sold or bought, one moiety of which forfeitures shall be to the use of the commonwealth, and the other moiety to him or them that will sue for the same, to be recovered by action of debt or information in any court of record.

III. And be it farther enacted, That every slave imported into this commonwealth, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, shall, upon such importation become free.

IV. Provided always, That this act shall not be construed to extend to those who may incline to remove from any of the United States, and become citizens of this, provided, that within ten days after their removal into the same they take the following oath before some magistrate of this commonwealth: "I, A. B. do swear, that my removal to the state of Virginia was with no intention to evade the act for preventing the farther importation of slaves within this commonwealth, nor have I brought with me, or will cause to be brought, any slaves, with an intent of selling them, nor have any of the slaves now in my possession been imported from Africa, or any of the West India islands, since the first day of November, 1778. So help me God." Or to travellers and others, making a transient stay in this commonwealth, bringing slaves with them for necessary attendance, and carrying them out again.[2]

V. Provided also, and be it farther enacted, That this act shall not be construed to extend to persons claiming slaves by descent, devise, or marriage, or to any citizens of this commonwealth being now the actual owners and proprietors of slaves residing or being in any of the United States and removing such slaves into this commonwealth.

VI. And it is farther enacted, That so much of an act of assembly made in the year 1753, intituled "An act for the better government of servants and slaves", as comes within the purview of this act, shall be, and the same is hereby repealed.[3]

124. Thomas Newton to Governor James Monroe, 1801.[1]

February 4, 1801.

Mr. Wm. Pennock, agent for the Navy, has just informed me that Capt. Baron, of the Chesapeake Frigate, has sent in here a vessel belonging to one of the N. England Governments, which had a cargo of slaves on board bound to the Havanna from Guinea. About 30 slaves are now on board the prize; the remainder were taken on board the Frigate, for the vessel was short of provisions and too thick stowed to proceed with the whole of them. Capt. Baron's humanity

[2] Such exceptions were certain to raise difficult questions in administering the law. See Cal. Va. St. P., VIII. 255-256.

[3] In 1793 Virginia took a further step: "And be it further enacted, That in case any slave shall be brought or come into this state from Africa or the West India islands, directly or indirectly, upon information thereof given to any justice of the peace, it shall be his duty to cause such slave to be apprehended immediately and transported out of this commonwealth, and the expense attending such transportation, shall be paid by the person importing such slave, recoverable in the name of the justice directing such slave to be transported, by warrant before a single magistrate" (Statutes at Large of Virginia, new ser., I. 239). The procedure by which slaves were to be apprehended and sent from the state was stated in some detail in an act passed in 1801 (ibid., II. 301). In the years that followed 1793 the interest shifted from the trade to the question of emancipation. The object of Judge Tucker when he sent his queries to Jeremy Belknap of Massachusetts was to remove the obstacles to emancipation. Importation into the state he obviously believed to be ended and the share of Virginians in the trade to other colonies was considered too small to demand attention. Mass. Hist. Soc., Collections, first ser., IV. 191-211.

[124] [1] Cal. Va. St. P., IX. 197-198. Most of the material relating to the nineteenth century illustrates difficulties in no sense peculiar to Virginia but rather related to her history in some incidental manner.

is much applauded in doing it, as it has probably saved the lives of so many human beings. The vessel is moored at Craney Island, and none will be permitted to land. I shall be obliged to your Excellency for instructions how I am to act on this subject, as it is a new case. Mr. Pennock has wrote to the Secretary of the Navy on the subject, but as our Laws prohibit the importation, and the Law of Congress directs the capture of vessels trading to Guinea, I am at a loss how to act. . . .

125. Philip Norborne Nicholas to Governor James Monroe, 1801.[1]

February 11, 1801.

Your favor of yesterday with its inclosures I duly received, and have considered with much attention the subject upon which you request my opinion.

By an Act of Congress passed on 22d of March, 1794, entitled "An Act to prohibit the carrying on the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country", after a clause prohibiting the slave trade to be carried on by any citizens or residents of the United States to any foreign country, it enacts, "and if any ship or vessel shall be so fitted out as aforesaid for the said purposes, or shall be caused to sail so as aforesaid, every such ship or vessel, her tackle, furniture, apparel and other appurtenances shall be forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to be seized, prosecuted and condemned in any of the Circuit Courts, or District Court, whence the said ship or vessel may be found and seized." [2] This act although it provides for the forfeiture of the vessel etc. in case it is contravened, is silent as to the disposition of any slaves that may be found on board any vessel engaged in this illicit trade. The Act of Virginia Assembly which passed upon the subject of the importation of free negroes and mulattoes into this Commonwealth on the 10th of Dec., 1793, in the 4th Sec. declares, "That in case any slave shall be brought or come into this State from Africa or the West India Islands, directly or indirectly, upon information thereof given to any Justice of the Peace, it shall be his duty to cause such slave to be apprehended immediately, and transported out of this

[2] On Aug. 28, 1802, Newton wrote: "If there are any condemned negroes to be transported, there is an opportunity to sell about 30 to a place from which there will be no danger of their returning to Virginia." Cal. Va. St. P., IX. 318.

[125] [1] Ibid., pp. 199-200.

[2] Statutes at Large of Virginia, I. 347-349.

Commonwealth, and the expence attending such transportation shall be paid by the person importing such slave, recoverable in the name of the Justice directing such slave to be transported by warrant before a single Magistrate.[3] It is clear from this clause of the Act of Assembly, that persons of the description therein mentioned, were intended by the Legislature to be entirely excluded from the State limits, since it makes it the duty of the Magistracy to cause such slaves to be apprehended immediately and transported out of the Commonwealth.

The Act of Congress does not conflict with this Act in its provisions since it is silent as to the disposition of negroes on board of vessels engaged in this traffic. I am aware that it may be said that the power to try such vessels in the Courts of the United States, necessarily gives the power to bring such vessels and their cargoes into any port of the United States. I am also aware that the laws of the Union when constitutionally made, are paramount to the State laws, and that where there is a conflict, the latter must yield to the former. I cannot, however, think that a State law can be repealed and nullified by an Act of Congress by a side Wind or new implication. The provisions of the Act of Congress ought to be express, and if such act can exist and be reconciled with the State law, I do not think that the State law will be construed to be repealed.

As I see nothing in the Act of Congress interfering with the act of our Assembly, I suppose the latter is still in force.

If it be so there can be no doubt that the negroes which are mentioned in Col. Newton's letter, and which are stated to come from Africa, are excluded by our laws from this State.

126. Case of the Sally, 1801.[1]

The Secretary of the Treasury, to whom was referred the petition of Elias De Butts, William Combs, and others, praying compensation for damages sustained by the seizure and detention of a vessel and cargo, libelled on suspicion of being engaged in the slave trade, and afterwards acquitted and restored to them, respectfully submits the following report:

The Schooner Sally, of Norfolk, sixty tons burthen, and with a crew of six or seven men, arrived in the river Patuxent in the month of November, 1801, without any papers whatever on board, the master, Elias De Butts, having, as was stated by the crew, ordered

[126] [1] American State Papers, Commerce and Navigation, I. 726. This is signed by Albert Gallatin. An American vessel, the Richmond, which sailed to St. Helena, "from thence to Mozambique, on the coast of Africa, with a design of proceeding afterwards with a cargo of slaves to the Havannah", may have had a Virginia connection, but the editor knows of no proof that such was the case. Catterall, Judicial Cases, I. 26.

her to that port, and proceeded himself to Baltimore. Under those circumstances, the collector of Nottingham took possession of the vessel on the seventeenth of November, and caused the cargo to be landed. On the 27th of the same month Captain De Butts made his appearance, and produced the papers of the vessel. By these it appeared that she was the property of William Combs, of Norfolk, and that she had cleared on the 10th of October from Charleston, S. C. for Cape de Verd Islands. From distress of weather on the voyage, and having sprung a leak, she had put in to the Chesapeake. The cargo consisted of 20 hhds. of tobacco, 6 do. of rum, 20 bbls. flour, 36 do. bread, 25 kegs crackers, 34 pair oars, 937 feet inch plank, 241 feet scantling, 54 pair hand cuffs, and sundry chains, bolts, staples, and long bars, a small box glass beads, and 37 shaken hogsheads. The three last articles were omitted in the manifest. The collector, under all the circumstances of the case, inferred that the vessel was intended for the slave trade, and applied to the treasury for instructions. After consulting the attorney general, it was decided that the vessel should be libelled, under the acts prohibiting the slave trade; and the grounds on which that decision was made will appear from the following extracts of letters from the Secretary of the Treasury to the collector of Nottingham, and to the Comptroller of the Treasury, both under date of 30th November, 1801. The letter to the Collector was as followeth:

Upon a full view of the circumstances stated in your letter, and of those which appear on a comparative view of the actual cargo, and that entered in the manifest of the Schooner Sally, late from Charleston, the presumptive evidence that she was intended for the slave trade is such as to make it the duty of the Executive to have a prosecution instituted, leaving it to the ordinary course of law to decide whether the equipment of the vessel was actually for that purpose or not.

The reasons which induce that determination are, that certain parts of the cargo, viz. hand-cuffs, etc. could be intended only for the slave trade; that other parts of the cargo were essentially necessary for the same object, viz. principally the scantling and planks for partition; and the 35 shaken hogsheads to be filled with the necessary water for the return voyage; that the cargo itself, though not, if considered alone, a subject of suspicion, affords corroborating proof of intention, inasmuch as it was precisely such as was calculated for the trade, viz. rum, tobacco, beads, and provisions, and that those parts of the cargo, which, from their nature, were most likely to disclose the object, viz. the hand-cuffs, shaken hogsheads, and beads, were omitted in the manifest. To these may be added the conduct of the captain, when forced by stress of weather into the Chesapeake, viz. passing by Norfolk, where the vessel belongs, ordering her to as private a place as he could devise, and going himself to Baltimore with the vessel's papers.

The district attorney will receive instructions to institute the proper suits, and, until you shall hear from him, you will be pleased to detain the vessel and cargo, taking, however, such steps as may be essentially necessary for the preservation of both.

The manifest, clearance, etc. are forwarded to the district attorney. The temporary register remains with the captain. A circumstance, though not necessarily connected with the intended prosecution, appears rather mysterious. The vessel belongs to a Mr. Combs, of Norfolk; Captain De Butts, who seems to have acted for him, chartered the vessel, as he says, for himself and two other persons in New York or Charleston. Neither his authority from the owner, nor the charter party, nor any articles of agreement between the co-partners for the voyage, are produced; it seems that, if every thing was fair, and the object of the voyage innocent, those papers would have been exhibited in proof thereof. . . .

The vessel and cargo were accordingly libelled by the district attorney of Maryland; but no other proofs appearing on trial, they were acquitted by the district judge, on the 7th of January following; and on the 11th of the same month the collector was served with the order for restoring, which was accordingly complied with. The appeal filed by the district attorney did not prevent the restoration of the vessel and cargo, and was intended merely to settle a point of law, viz. whether such prosecutions should, as admiralty suits, be decided by the court or be tried by a jury. The question has been decided, contrary to the opinion of the district attorney, in favor of the jurisdiction of the court without the intervention of a jury.

Subsequent to the restoration of the vessel and cargo to Captain De Butts, the owner, William Combs, who is one of the petitioners, came to Nottingham in pursuit of his vessel, which he stated to have been kept by the captain contrary to his wish, and the intended voyage to Africa to have commenced without his knowledge. He executed, on the 26th Jan. 1802, an instrument of writing, exonerating the custom house officers from any damages that might arise in consequence of the seizure of the vessel; and he made, at the same time, an affidavit, stating, amongst other things, that when Captain De Butts took the command of his vessel, in March 1801, no handcuffs, chains, bolts, bars or locks, were on board, and that he verily believed those articles to have been taken on board at Charleston, on her intended voyage for Africa. This was intended to rebut the assertion that those suspicious articles were merely iron ballast which had been on board previous to Captain De Butts taking command of the vessel.

Mr. Combs failed in his attempt to regain possession of the schooner. Captain De Butts took her to Baltimore, where, having signed accounts for wages to the seamen, she was libelled by them, and sold on that account. That was altogether a proceeding of the parties, and how the matter was settled between the owner and the captain is not known.

In estimating the damages actually arising from the seizure and subsequent proceedings, it will be recollected that the detention of the vessel, from the 17th November to the end of that month, was solely owing to the conduct of the captain in going to Baltimore, and carrying the papers with him. From the first day of December, 1801, to the 11th day of January following, a period of 42 days, the vessel and cargo were detained by reason of the seizure and prosecution instituted by order of Government; and to that extent injury and actual damages have been sustained by the parties.

Whether they are entitled to remuneration on that account, is a question which must depend on the evidence on which the seizure was made. That point did not, and could not, come before the court. The decree merely states that it appears to the court that the schooner was not fitted, equipped, etc. for the purpose of carrying on a trade and traffic in slaves; but not, as is stated in the petition, that there appeared no evidence to justify the seizure. All the facts as they were at the time stated, and on which Government proceeded, appear in this report, and will be found more at large in the correspondence and papers hereto annexed.

From these, a correct opinion on the question of compensation by government may be formed. But it is proper to add, that, if the proceedings were instituted on erroneous or insufficient grounds, there was not at least any wish to oppress the parties. For, by the absence of the captain on the arrival of the vessel, and consequent omission to make report and entry, within the time limited by law, there being distilled spirits on board, a forfeiture of the rum, and two penalties, of five hundred and one thousand dollars, had unquestionably been incurred: for neither of which was any prosecution instituted. The vessel and cargo having been libelled for what was considered the greater offence, it was thought that the loss of the whole property, in case of condemnation, would be a sufficient punishment for all the offences, and that, in case of acquittal, which presupposed innocence of being concerned in the slave trade, it would be oppressive to add a rigid recovery of the other penalties to the injury caused by the unavoidable detention of the vessel and cargo.

127. Fontaine Maury to Governor James Monroe, 1802.[1]

August 12, 1802, New York.

Some little time ago three French ships of war arrived at this port from Gaudaloupe, via Carthagena, where they touched with the view to sell or otherwise dispose of a number of renegade negroes they have on board, but the Spanish Government not permitting them to be landed, they proceeded hither and dispatched a vessel to General Le Clerc for further instructions as to the mode of disposing of them, which they daily expect to receive. The number of these unfortunate half-starved wretches, already arrived and momentarily expected in the other ships of war, amount to 1500, and the best information I can collect, after having been at due pains to procure it, I have little doubt but they will attempt to dispose of them along the Southern coast in a clandestine manner. They have in many instances offered them for sale in this city, in open violation of the laws. Sixty of them have been taken sick and thrown into the Marine Hospital, and daily additions may well be expected to that number.

Although this information may not in every respect be correct, yet I believe it so, and in consequence of the extreme agitation of the public mind I have deemed it expedient to impart it to you, with a view that you may make such use of it as you may think necessary and proper to guard against a measure which must highly endanger the peace and tranquility of the State you represent and those south of it.

I have written to the Secretary of State and to Governor Mirar and Genl. Moultrie and Col. Wade Hampton have communicated with Governors of the Carolinas and Georgia on the subject.

128. Colonel William Davies to Governor James Monroe, 1802.[1]

Collectors Office, Norfolk
August 24th, 1802.

Captain Drummond, entered at this office just arrived from Charleston and reports that on his passage two days ago spoke a French frigate from Cape Francois full of negroes, off Cape Hatteras and appeared to be steering for the Capes of Virginia, and that there was a report at Charleston when he left it (which was confirmed by Capt. Cowper a passenger from Charleston lately arrived from Cape Francois) it was the determination of the French Government there to transport from St Domingo such of the Blacks as had borne arms against the French. As the arrival of these people might possibly be a subject of executive regulation, I have thought it my duty to make this communication to you. . . .

129. Act to amend the several Laws concerning Slaves, 1806.[1]

January 25, 1806.

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly, That if any slave or slaves shall hereafter be brought into this commonwealth, and shall either be kept therein one whole year, or so long at different times as shall amount to one year, or shall be sold or hired within this commonwealth, in every such case, the owner shall forfeit all right to such slave or slaves, which right shall absolutely vest in the overseers of the poor of any county or corporation, who shall apprehend, or shall attempt to apprehend such forfeited slave or slaves within their jurisdiction, in trust for the benefit of the poor of such county or corporation. . . .[2]

5. . . . if the jury shall find that the said slave or slaves were brought into this commonwealth, and have remained therein, contrary to the provisions of this act, the court shall make an order, directing him, her or them to be delivered to the overseers of the poor, to be by them sold for cash and applied as herein directed. . . .

8. Every person hereafter bringing into this commonwealth any slave or slaves, contrary to this act, shall forfeit and pay the sum of four hundred dollars for every slave so brought in; and every person selling, buying or hiring any such slave or slaves, knowing the same to have been brought in contrary to the provisions of this act, shall forfeit and pay the sum of four hundred dollars for every slave so bought, sold or hired; which forfeitures shall accrue to the use of the commonwealth, to be recovered by action of debt or information, in which the defendant shall be held to special bail; judgment shall be rendered without regard to any exception for want of form, and an attorney's fee of twenty dollars shall be taxed in the bill of costs. . . .

[3] "Capt. Joseph Moonday who came lately from Guiney and brought into Yorke River about 230 negroes, and I heard they were sold from 28 l. to 35 l. per head; the greatest price that has been known. There were as many buyers as negros, and I think that, if 2000 were imported, there would be substantial buyers for them. They expect several ships from Guiny with negros, but I am afraid that no more will come" (Nicholson to the Board of Trade, Aug. 1, 1700, Cal. St. P. Col., 1700, p. 452). For the adventures of another Captain Monday see ante, no. 15.

[4] Items relating to these and other voyages of the vessels here listed are to be found in T 70: 282. On Sept. 7 and Oct. 15, 1703, the master, Thomas Arnold, drew bills of £95 and £113, on the Royal African Company, credited to the Angola. In a list of protested bills of exchange for negroes sold by Mr. Henry Fielding, from the first voyage of the Angola, the Virginia names are: Edward Mathews £33, Constance Jones £18 and £19, Thomas Powell £38, George Ridley £4 and £28, John Robinson £3, Thomas Wellborn £18, John Bernard £1, John Stubbs £3, John Podgitt £5, Thomas Reede £25. The English merchants drawn upon are John Hyde, Richard Lee, Robert Dunckley, Francis Lee, Arthur Bailey, Richard Franklin, Robert Bristol and Company, and Micajah Perry and Company. Over ninety bills drawn on Perry and Lane or on Micajah Perry alone are listed in T 70: 282, as well as eighty Virginia drawers of bills. For this material the editor is indebted to Professor Curtis Nettles of the University of Wisconsin.

[5] A bill of exchange for £220 was drawn by the master of the Postillion to be placed to the account of that ship on Oct. 4, 1704. The "Ballance for Sales of Negroes per the Postillion sold by Henry Fielding" is represented by seven bills of exchange: Richard Anderson £45, drawn on Perry and Company, £25, on Robert Wise; G. Corbin £22, on A. Bailey; William Lyne (?) £18, on Thomas Wharton; Edward Berkeley £35, Richard Littlepage £110, and Thomas Butts £110, all on Perry and Company. The dates of these bills extend from Jan. 1, 1705, to July 3, 1706. T 70: 282.

[6] This was probably the author of A New Account of Guinea. He writes of a later voyage in which he was in the employ of Messrs. Bradley, Virginia merchants.

[7] On July 21, 1705, Edward Tomlin (Tomas?) drew a bill of £59 on the African Company for value received from Gavin Corbin, to pay the wages of the seamen of the Dorothy. On July 11 he had drawn on the company for £310. Eleven bills of 1705 and 1706, "balance" of the Dorothy's account, include: Robert Peyton £26, Thomas Richeson £17, Christopher Carlton £26, Temothes Kallendar £15, John Collier £20, John Slater £20, Charles Collier £27, John Ellis £15, William Erbanck £23, William Collins £26, Anthony Murray £16. T 70: 282.

[8] "Power of Attorney from Mr. John Denew of London, merchant to Mr. Humphrey Brooke, of London, physician to sue etc. Mr. Miles Cary and Mr. William Churchill, of Virginia, or their heirs on account of debts in any wise appearing whether the same be upon account of a cargo of negroes sent and consigned to them in 1705 on board of the ship London Galley, or otherwise however. (Recorded in York Co., 21 Jan., 1716.)" Wm. and Mary Coll. Quar., XXVI. 287.

[9] See ante, no. 74, n. 4. On Dec. 24, 1705, Governor Nott reported to the Board of Trade that Jonathan Yates, carpenter of the Thomas and John, had complained that Captain Ransom had beaten one of the seamen on board so severely as to cause his death. The surgeon on board however ascribed the death to fever. Cal. St. P. Col., 1704-1705, p. 740.

[10] In September Thomas Durham (Durban?) drew upon the African Company for £466, "expenses of the Phoenix". The records of the African Company contain for the years 1705-1706 a list of nine protested bills, amounting to £269, "on account of Negroes sold by Hen. Fielding". T 70: 282.

[11] In the letter which accompanied this list Jennings, president of the Council, gave 5928 as the importation of the separate traders. On Jan. 23, 1708, they reported to the Board of Trade that they had sent to Virginia 2734 negroes between 1704 and 1707 (B. T. Jour., 1704-1709, p. 454). In 1710, during one of the recurrent struggles over granting to the African Company its former monopoly of the trade, the anonymous author of A True State of the Present Differences between the Royal African Company and the Separate Traders (London, 1710, p. 35) wrote: "If we enquire into Virginia which is so precious a Jewel in the British Crown, we shall find upwards of Fifteen Thousand Negroes in that Colony also: and I defy the African Company to prove that ever they have imported so many as two thousand into that particular Province, since they have been a Joint-Body." For 1709 the customs record shows that the Prosperous carried 125 negroes to Virginia, the Leopard 201. These cargoes belonged to separate traders. C. O. 388: 13, p. 104.

[131] [1] C. O. 5: 1320, R 3, pp. 11, 13, 15, 19. These lists, sent by Spotswood to the Board of Trade, were received and read June 28, 1726 (for the report for 1712 see post, no. 132). Since many of the entries are undated they cannot be arranged in chronological order, and are therefore given under the separate Virginia districts. Later reports are thrown into one chronological list. These lists were probably made out in compliance with an order of May 28, 1702, and later dates: "Ordered that all the Navall officers of all and every the Districts within this Colony make up their Accompts of the Impositions on Liquors and Serv'ts and Slaves for all Ships entred or that shall be entred by them to the 24th day of June Next and make oath to the same before Mr. Treasurer as ussuall." *Ex. [2] May 30, 1717, "The George of Glascow has about 190 slaves bound to Barbadoes or Virginia" (T 70: 6, p. 52). The bulk of this cargo had evidently been discharged in Barbados.

[132] [1] C. O. 5: 1316, O 141, p. 402. On Oct 26, 1711, by circular letter, the Board of Trade asked the number of negroes imported into Virginia, and on July 26, 1712, Spotswood replied that there had been no negroes imported from Africa since his arrival in Virginia, "nor like to be while the price of tobacco is so low, and the country so much in debt. There have been a few brought from Barbados and are generally such as have been first entered there, of which I doubt not your Lord'ps have accounts from thence." On Feb. 11, 1713, he sent to the board the list here given, writing: "I have also sent an account of the negroes imported from the coast of Africa, being but a small number in one ship last Fall; and there's no great reason to expect many more while the price of tobacco continues so low, and the country by that means so poor" (Cal. St. P. Col., 1712-1714, pp. 16, 137, 139; B. T. Jour., 1709-1714, p. 304; Sainsbury Trans., VIII. 322, 372, 400). The reply of the board to this letter predicted a speedy increase in the price of tobacco once the French trade was opened up. Relief and restoration of prosperity in the colony was delayed by a drought in 1714 which seriously damaged the tobacco crop, but by 1718 Spotswood reported a flourishing plantation. Cal. St. P. Col., 1712-1714, p. 206; Va. Hist. Reg., IV. 10.

A letter from Robert Carter to the Board of Trade June 29, 1727, contained the list of importations from 1718 to Lady Day, 1727, with the statement that since then upwards of 1200 had been received and that more were expected daily, but that none were from the African Company. have been Slaving on the Coast of Madagascar, and are returned from thence very rich. The Pyrates on the Coast of Madagascar, who lie in wait for the East India Men, have forced from them what Provisions and Men they thought fit, but in return have made them some valuable Presents of Money, etc. The Eugene is seized in Virginia, and the Capt. sent on board the Man of War there, in Order to be carried home for his Tryal, not for any Dealings with the Pyrates, but for having on Board East India Goods. The two others are clear'd" (Boston Gazette, Aug. 21, 1721). Spotswood's account of this incident differs somewhat: "While I was employed on the Frontiers of this Government, Information was given to the Capt's of his Maj't's Ships of War on this Station, that certain Masters of Ships, lately arrived here from Madagascar, had there traded with Pyrats and Supplied them wth Arms and other Stores of War, upon which Sundry of the Comm'rs nominated by his Majesty for tryal of Pyracys in this Colony convened, and in conjunction wth the Capt's of the Men of War issued their warrants for bringing before them three of the Commanders of those Madagascar Ships, vizt: Richard Herbert of the Henrietta, of London; Chalonce Williams, of the Gascoign Galley, of Bristoll, and Jos. Stratton, of the Prince Eugene, of the same Port. The Evidence against the two former not Swearing convincing enough, the Comm'rs thought fitt to discharge them, but there appearing stronger proof ag'st the latter, they were of opinion that he ought to be sent home to Great Britain, to take his Tryal as an Accessary to Piracy, and that Application should be made for my warrant for sending him home in the —— Man of War, and in the meantime committed him to Capt. Wharwood's Custody. . . ." Spotswood made haste to return but found when he arrived that Captain Wharwood had already sailed, taking his prisoner but without the papers concerning the case. Spotswood to Secretary Craggs, July 28, 1721, Va. Hist. Soc., Collections, II. 351.

[4] In April, 1721, the Sarah, with 250 slaves, sailed from Cape Coast Castle for Virginia (T 70: 7, pp. 18-19). Though the shipments of the company to Virginia were small, the records show that some attention was given to this colony. On Dec. 12, 1712, the Committee of Accounts reported Mr. Robert Richardson as qualified to serve the company as chief merchant at any of its Guinea settlements, "he understanding Negroes proper for Virginia and Mary Land where he says he resided three years and travelled through most parts of those countreys". He was appointed to the Gambia factory early in January (T 70: 90, pp. 78, 84). Throughout 1721 committee reports frequently contain the item: "If too late for Virginia then send to Jamaica" (T 70: 123; see also T 70: 7, p. 26). On Dec. 16, 1721, and Jan. 4, 1722, enquiry was made as to how far the Virginia agents, Willis and Chiswell, were complying with their contract to make returns for the negro cargoes on the Otter and the Sarah. These were to be in pitch, tar, staves, planks, or any other lumber available (T 70: 123). In 1723 Spotswood had a contract for 400 slaves, part of whom were to be sent him from Gambia by the Dove. T 70: 7, pp. 63, 77, T 70: 91, pp. 205, 208, 215, T 70: 124, Feb. 21, 22, Mar. 2, Apr. 23, 1723.

[5] In the record of vessels sent out by the company the item for Mar. 14, 1721, is, "Otter Burth'n 170 Tun Saild Dec. 25th from Ireland Capt. Tho: Forster, Went to Cork to take in provisions from thence to Maderas for Wine, so to Gambia, thence with 240 Negros for Virginia. Cargo 470. 19. 10." On Apr. 25, 1722, the Virginia factors of the company, Willis and Chiswell, sent bills of exchange amounting to £605, on account of the cargo of the Otter. About the same time the Sherbro was to be dispatched for Sierra Leone for "wood and teeth if possible, if not 240 slaves for Virginia". That she might arrive in Virginia in the "proper season", she was to sail from the West Coast by the middle of June. Since the name of this vessel does not appear in the list of arriving vessels it may be that she obtained her cargo of wood and teeth. T 70: 123, pp. 17-18, T 70: 91, p. 133.

[6] "Our Merchants have Advice that the Ship Baylor, Capt. Verney, having been Slaving on the Coast of Guinea, and thence set Sail for Virginia, turn'd Pirate, the Negroes being thrown overboard. The said Ship was afterwards taken by a Dutch Cruizer, after a fight of four Hours." Boston News Letter, May 9, 1723.

[7] The number reported by the separate traders should be 8185 and the total 8612, rather than the sums here given. The report for York River is signed by William Robertson; that for the Upper James by Lightfoot; that for the Lower James by Wilson Cary; that for Rappahannock by Robert Carter, jr.

[8] Endorsed: "Rappahannock River, List of Negroes imported from Africa to Ladyday, 1727." From the Lower District of the James and that of South Potomac the report was, "No Negroes imported" (C. O. 5: 1320, R 55, p. 339). It is to be observed that the next document begins the record in April, 1727, with an entry in the Lower James district but from the West Indies, not from Africa.

[134] [1] C. O. 5: 1443. The lists which follow are rearrangements of the Naval Officers' Lists, which were sent home from time to time. The number of guns and men and the description of the vessels have been omitted and the lists from the different districts have been consolidated in chronological order. The form of the headings, the dates, and certain abbreviations has been changed, but the attempt has been made to retain the original spelling of proper names. Up to this point importations from Africa alone have been given; throughout no. 134 those from the West Indies are included.

[3] Lists from the Rappahannock district were signed by Robert Carter, jr., naval officer; those from the Lower District of the James by Wilson Cary; from York River, William Robertson; after 1730 Charles Carter signs the Rappahannock list.

[4] The report made by William Robertson to the Board of Trade, of the negroes imported into the York River district from the coast of Africa, gives this as the Castle, galley, with 211 negroes from Calabar, which is probably correct (C. O. 5: 1321, f. 157). Thomas Lee, naval officer of South Potomac, and Robert Carter, jr., reported no negroes from Africa between Sept. 29, 1727, and Apr. 25, 1728. There were no African negroes imported into the James River district for this same period. Ibid., ff. 153, 155, 158.

William Atkinson, sent from Boston in December, 1728. See this work, III. 37.

[6] This item comes from C. O. 5: 1323, f. 81, a report of negroes imported from the coast of Africa between Apr. 25 and Oct. 25, 1731, by private traders and by the African Company. The one vessel reported by Carter belonged to a private trader. The Virginian who wrote on Aug. 27, 1731, "I am told a Guinea man is expected Dayly", had long to wait if this list is complete. *Va. [9] James Laroche was sheriff of Bristol in 1734 and mayor in 1750; his son, Sir James, was a member of Parliament between 1772 and 1779 and in 1789 was a member of the Bristol committee created to oppose the abolition of the slave trade. "Mr. Chamberlayne", named among the principal Bristol tobacco traders in 1730 and 1740, had lived in Virginia. In 1785 William Gordon was enumerated among those Bristol merchants who, from small beginnings, had accumulated fortunes. Latimer, Annals of Bristol, pp. 463, 473, 477.

[10] In September, 1732, William Byrd spent the night at Tuckahoe, where he had some conversation with a Mrs. Fleming: "Put some Questions to her about the bad distemper that raged then in the Country. I mean the Bloody Flux, that was brought us in the Negro-Ship consigned to Colo. Braxton." This probably refers to one of the vessels arriving in the summer of 1731. [15] Abraham Hooke was sheriff of Bristol in 1706 and master of the Society of Merchant Venturers in 1712. Latimer, Annals of Bristol, pp. 534, 537.

[16] John Brickdale is among the Bristol merchants who advanced from poverty to considerable wealth, being worth at his death £100,000 (ibid., p. 462). "The Ship Withers is just arriv'd from the Coast of Africa, with near 300 choice Slaves, which are to be put to Sale at York this day, and to continue there 'til Saturday next: And at West Point on Monday, the 16th Instant, and there to continue 'til they are all sold, by G. BRAXTON." Va. Gazette, Aug. 9, 1736.

[18] Notices in the Va. Gazette, Apr. 8 and 22, 1737, announced the arrival of this vessel with 490 "choice young Slaves", consigned to Thomas Nelson. On the 29th the Gazette contained the following item: "Cleared. Apr. 23. Ship Johnson, of Leverpoole, James Gildart, Master, for Maryland, with 260 Slaves and some returned Goods."

[19] The Va. Gazette of June 10, 1737, contained notice of the arrival of an unnamed vessel with 330 negroes consigned to "Col. Moore". This may have been the Hobhouse, referred to by name in the issue of June 17.

[20] The Brice also carried "214 Scrivillos [small tusks], 44 Teeth, 7 Weight Mallageta Pepper", an unusual cargo for Virginia. Ibid., July 15, 1737.

[24] The cargo of the Walpole, which included six tons of redwood as well as the negroes, was consigned to "Sec'y Carter". Va. Gazette, Aug. 11, 1738.

[25] The Faulcon brought ivory as well as negroes (Va. Gazette, Aug. 25, 1738). An item in the Gazette of Aug. 4 may refer to this vessel: "There is a Ship arrived from Guinea, with about 300 Negroes consign'd to Col. Moore." The Gazette of July 28 mentions the Hon. Thomas Lee as the consignee of a "Negro Ship lately arriv'd at Hampton, and gone up to Potomack".

[26] C. O. 5: 1444, 1445, 1446.

[27] Notice of the arrival of this sloop is to be found in the Gazette, Mar. 9. In a summary of imports from Dec. 25, 1738, to Mar. 25, 1739, this one negro is the only one mentioned. Va. Gazette, May 18, 1739.

[28] "The Crosse-Galley, Capt. Joseph Pitman, Master, lately arrived from Africa, with a choice Cargo of Slaves. The Sale whereof will begin on Monday the 4th Instant, at West-Point, And as soon as discharg'd, will prepare to receive a Freight for Bristol. . . . HARMER and KING." Ibid., June 1, 15, 1739.

[29] The cargo of the Anne was consigned to Isham and Richard Randolph (ibid., June 8, Aug. 10, 1739). Of the terms on which Virginia consignees sold slaves we know little. Col. William Byrd, in a letter to Mr. Andrews of Rotterdam concerning the migration of Palatines, wrote: "This [eight per cent.] is the Allowance Our Negro Sellers have, which Sell for more than Double these People will, and consequently afford twice the Profet." Am. Hist. Rev., I. 90.

[30] "That the Black Prince, Capt. John Simpson, of London, is lately arrived from the Gold Coast, with a Cargo of choice Slaves, the Sale of which began at York Town on the 7th Instant, and is to continue there till the whole Cargo is disposed of. She is intended to take in Tobacco at Seven Pounds per Ton, for London. THOMAS and WILLIAM NELSON." On June 29 the master of the Black Prince advertised for tobacco; then added: "I find it has been industriously reported for many Years, that Ships which come from Guinea here with Slaves, are never after in a Condition to take in Tobacco, which is very absurd and ungenerous, and a great Discouragement to bring Negros here: But I cannot think any Man, who has any Notion of a Ship, can ever imagine anyone will venture his Life and Fortune to Sea in a Vessel that is not Seaworthy. However, to clear up all Doubts of that kind, if any Gentleman has a Mind to ship any Tobacco on board me, I will cause a Survey to be made of my Vessel by whom they shall desire, and her Condition shall be reported accordingly. . . . JOHN SIBSON [SIMPSON]." Va. Gazette, June 8, 22, 29, 1739.

[31] The Gazette, Aug. 24, 1739, adds one entry, that of the John and Mary, Rich. Tillidge, which entered from Madeira and Barbados on June 14, with one negro.

[32] The Gazette of July 6 and Dec. 14, 1739, announced the arrival of 106 negroes consigned to John Carter.

'Tis said she has buried very few, and that they are all exceedingly healthy" (Va. Gazette, May 16, 1751). John Blair also records the arrival of this vessel, though with no amplification. African news apparently interested him, for on Mar. 3, 1751, his diary record is: "Sad news from coast of Africa; a ship burnt, etc., and great mortality am'g the slaves of another." *Wm. and Mary Coll. [66] Less importance seems to be attached to the section from which the negroes came in Virginia than was the case with the South Carolina planters. The advertisements for cargoes occasionally give the source but frequently omit it. Yet the notices of runaways indicate that negroes from various parts of Africa were carried to this market and that the planters distinguished among them clearly: "he is a young Angola Negro"; "a very Black Mundigo Negro Man"; "a Native of Madagascar"; "a Congo Negro slave"; "of the Suso country"; "New Negro Fellow . . . calls himself Bonna and says he came from a Place of that name in the Ibo Country, in Africa"; "marked in the face as the Gold Coast slaves generally are". *Va. [67] Other vessels can be added from the Gazette (Jan. 12, Oct. 5, 1769): the brig Fanny, John Oliffe, entered Jan. 4, with 25 slaves from Grenada and St. Eustatius; "Williamsburg, Oct. 5. The ship Rae Galley, and the brigantine Lilly, both from Antigua, and seized by the Collector of this district, for not entering sundry slaves imported in them are both condemned at a court of Vice Admiralty held here this day"; "To be Sold, pursuant to a decree of the Court of Vice Admiralty, at Martin's Brandon, on Tuesday the 17th instant, The ship Rae Galley, and brigantine Lilly, as they now lie at their moorings, for ready money. JOHN TYLER, Marshall."

INTRODUCTION

Among the colonies here considered South Carolina alone is given detailed presentation. For the others the documents printed throw light upon one or two aspects of the trade peculiar to the colony in question or not elsewhere developed. For North Carolina the material illustrates the effort to enforce the non-importation agreement; that for Georgia displays the attitude of a group of settlers deprived of negroes; while in Louisiana one finds opportunity to study the method by which the French supplied their colonies with slave labor. The one thing common to all these colonies is that their part in the trade was that of market, not that of carrier. This should not be interpreted to mean that they did no carrying but only that their part in the transportation of negroes was insignificant as compared with that of the northern colonies or with the volume of trade which entered their ports.

As Professor J. S. Bassett observed in 1896, the story of the negro in North Carolina must be constructed from meagre and unsatisfactory materials. To an even greater extent is this true of the slave trade to North Carolina, to which no section of material is here devoted.[1] One characteristic peculiar to the North Carolina slave trade helps to account for this paucity of records. A large number of slaves were brought into the colony by land rather than by water, and for these there are no reports comparable to customs entries or naval officers' lists. Throughout her history direct importation from Africa was comparatively small. Lack of good harbors and of a central port may have contributed to bring this about. The scarcity of hard money, sometimes offered as a reason, could hardly have been an important causal factor. In none of the colonies was it customary to purchase slaves with specie. Nor may one assume a lack of desire for slaves as an explanation of the absence of direct importation. On the contrary, they were reckoned "the greatest riches in these parts", and the planter was "at great pains to lay in store of gold and silver with which to purchase negroes in the West Indies and other places".[2] It was not thought possible to settle a plantation without negroes. The insurmountable difficulty was that North Carolina, in the first half of the eighteenth century, had no commodity with which to load English vessels, and it was at this time chiefly English vessels that were bringing slaves directly from Africa. This lack of a staple acceptable to England prevented her merchants from sending vessels to the colony and also made them unwilling to grant to North Carolina planters the liberal credit which was necessary if they were to become heavy purchasers of negro cargoes. The reluctance of the English trader to extend credit may also have been increased by the turbulent history of the colony's early days. Deprived of negroes direct from Africa, the colony purchased from Virginia, paying in food and live stock, or from New England, to which she sent pitch and tar.[3] At a later period many were brought from South Carolina. To Governor Burrington's complaint that the colonists carried specie to Virginia to purchase slaves instead of paying their quit rents the assembly replied, "those who take such pains to carry Provisions to Virginia at the Charge of a great Land Carriage, do it Chiefly to lodge Money there to purchase Slaves, which are difficult to be bought any other way".[4] The slaves thus obtained were by no means satisfactory. "Great is the loss this Country has sustained in not being supply'd by vessells from Guinea with Negroes; in any part of the Province the People are able to pay for a ships load; but as none can come directly from Affrica, we are under a necessity to buy the refuse refractory and distemper'd Negroes, brought from other Governments", Burrington complained in 1733.[5]

[2] John Brickell, The Natural History of North Carolina (1737), pp. 45, 272, quoted by R. H. Taylor, Slave-Holding in North Carolina, p. 20. On Dec. 15, 1716, Rev. John Urmstone wrote from North Carolina to the secretary of the S. P. G., asking him to arrange for the purchase of three or four Guinea negroes, three men "of middle stature about 20 years old and a Girl of about 16 years. here is no living without servants, there are none to be hired of any colour and none of the black kind to be sold good for anything under 50 or 60 £". In 1717 and 1718 he again wrote, insisting that he could not remain in North Carolina without two field workers and a domestic servant. N. C. Col. Recs., II. 260-261, 288, 310.

Little can be learned of the conditions in the colony from instructions sent to the governors, which were modelled upon those sent to other places rather than on the particular situation which the governor was to meet. In instructions of Dec. 14, 1730, Governor Burrington was exhorted to encourage merchants, especially the Royal African Company, despite the fact that that company had never sent cargoes to North Carolina.[6] In 1754 Governor Arthur Dobbs was directed to assent to no duty laid upon the importer of negroes, though there is no evidence that the colony had the slightest disposition to lay any such duty. Indeed so far was the province from imposing a restraining duty that the fifty-acre grant for every negro imported and held by householders remained in force when these instructions were written.[7] The report of Governor Dobbs of Jan. 1, 1755, makes it obvious that no restraining duty was needed at this time: "An Abstract of the Shipping and Tonnage and number of negroes Enter'd in North Carolina at a medium of 7 years ending the 1 Janry. 1755 . . . Negroes last year 19 . . . Negroes at a Medium 17."[8] On Apr. 12, 1772, Governor Martin wrote to Secretary Hillsborough: "I am not able to report to your Lordship with precision the number of Negroes that have been imported since my arrival here, but I think it will be found about 200."[9] At no time does the number of negroes imported seem large enough to have caused alarm.

[3] In 1724 Thomas Amory wrote from Boston to a customer in North Carolina, "In the fall we expect negroes here directly from Guinea, a vessel having sailed from here and one from Rhode Island". W. [4] N. C. Col. Recs., III. 609. So little do we know of how and when negroes were brought into this colony that it is a surprise to find their numbers estimated as 800 in 1709, 6,000 in 1730, 19,000 in 1756, and 30,000 in 1764 (Bassett, op. cit., pp. 187-188). Ballagh (History of Slavery in Virginia, p. 13n.) says that by 1726 North Carolina was importing 1000 negroes a year and paying better prices than were paid in Virginia or Maryland (citing De Bow, Resources of the South, I. 341).

Articulate objection to the importation of slaves makes its appearance on the eve of the Revolution. On Aug. 8, 1774, the freeholders of Rowan County voted: "That the African Trade is injurious to this Colony, obstructs the Population of it by freemen, prevents manufacturers, and other Useful Emigrants from Europe from settling among us, and occasions an annual increase of the Balance of Trade against the Colonies." This was followed three weeks later by the resolution of the Provincial Congress: "we will not import any slave or slaves, nor purchase any slave or slaves imported or brought into this province by others from any part of the world after the first day of November next."[10] Active efforts to enforce this resolution were taken during the last days of 1774 and the spring of 1775, as the following extracts from the proceedings of the safety committee at Wilmington testify:

WILMINGTON, 14th Dec. 1774.

. . . . The Committee met at 6 o'clock P.M. Mr. Hereld Blackmore, informed that he had imported since the first instant, in the Sloop Mary and the Brig —— five negro slaves, and craved advice how to proceed, as he had given orders for the purchasing and shipping said slaves, previous to the resolutions of the provincial Congress. The committee desired that Mr. Blackmore, would not sell, or send them out of town, but be accountable for them at the next meeting. . . .

WILMINGTON, Saturday the 17th Dec. 1774.

The Committee met according to adjournment.

The Committee finding upon inquiry that one of the slaves imported by Hereld Blackmore, was ordered after the publication of the resolves of the provincial convention of this province, and in contradiction thereto, and that he had at that time an opportunity to contradict the orders he had given for the other slaves, and he now confessing that he sent a copy of the provincial resolves to Granada: It is the opinion of the committee that the said slaves be re-shipped. And the committee do resolve that all slaves, imported since the first day of this instant, or which may be imported, shall be re-shipped from this province. Upon a suggestion to the committee that Mr. Arthur Mabson hath imported in his schooner from the West Indies, some slaves which are now at his plantation near this town: It is ordered that the sense of this committee relative thereto be made known to Mr. Mabson, and that Mr. Maclain write to him for that purpose, which he hath done as follows, to wit:

WILMINGTON, 17th Dec. 1774.

Sir: The committee of this town, chosen to observe the conduct of all persons touching the association of the General Congress, have resolved that all slaves imported into this river since the first day of December, instant, shall be re-shipped to the place from whence they came as soon as possible, and being informed that you have, contrary to the express letter of the said association, imported slaves from the West Indies, which you have now at your plantation, it is expected that you will give a particular account of the number thereof, and take such steps as may satisfy the committee that you intend, on your part, to adhere strictly to the regulations laid down by your representatives.

I am, Sir, your obdt. servant,

Mr. Mabson.

Saturday, Jan. 21st, 1775.[12]

Messrs. George and Thomas Hooper, H. Blackmore, Arthur Mabson and Peter Mallett, reported sundry negroes, imported by them since the 1st of December last.

Resolved, That notice be sent to Messrs. George and Thomas Hooper, Hinall Blackmore, Arthur Mabson, and Peter Mallett, to re-ship, by the first opportunity, the sundry negroes they have imported since the first day of December last. It being the opinion of this Committee that such importations are contrary to the resolves of the Continental Congress, and a Particular resolve of this committee. . . .

Monday, March 6th 1775.

. . . Mr. Harnett desired the opinion of the Committee respecting a Negro fellow he bought in Rhode Island (a Native of that place,) in the Month of October last, whom he designed to have brought with him to this Province, but the said Negro ran away at the time of his sailing from Rhode Island.

The question was put whether Mr. Harnett may import the said Negro from Rhode Island.

Resolved, Unanimously, That Mr. Harnett may import the said Negro from Rhode Island, and it is the opinion of this Committee that under the above cir-

Monday, March 20th, 1775.[13]

. . . . Resolved, That the Importers of negroes since the 1st of December last, be called upon at the next General meeting of this Committee on the 20th of April next, to produce Bills of Loading or other sufficient proof to the Committee, that they have reshipped the said negroes agreeable to the resolve of the General Congress as directed by this Committee.

Tuesday 24th March 1775.

Thursday, April 20th, 1775.[14]

. . . . Application was then made by Mr. Cruden, in behalf of a Mr. Elliott, setting forth that he had purchased the real and personal estate of Marmaduke Jones Esq., both of this province, and praying to have leave to import some of his house servants (negro now in Jamaica) ; the articles in the above association respecting the importation of slave being read, and the subject fully debated it was determined that said servants could not be imported.

Saturday May 20, 1775.

Ordered, That the Resolve entered on the journals of this committee on the last meeting, respecting the application to the committee for liberty to Mr. Elliott to import his house servants, be rescinded.

June 20, 1775.

On motion, for leave to —— Elletson to import his house servants from Jamaica, not exceeding six in number. It was carried against the motion, by a great majority.

For the period following the Revolution the customs records of Brunswick show the entry of 290 negroes between 1783 and 1789. Of these, 128 came from the West Indies, the remainder from New York, Savannah, Virginia, and Maryland, with 52 unaccounted for. In 1786 North Carolina imposed a duty, apparently intended to be prohibitive, upon slaves whether brought in by land or water. Nevertheless, under one pretext or another, slaves were imported into the state during the time that this act remained in force.[15]

[15] Taylor, Slave-Holding in North Carolina, p. 24; DuBois, Slave Trade, p. 229. Whether the act of 1786 was actually prohibitive or not, it was so regarded in South Carolina. The news of its passage was reported to Samuel Hopkins of Newport by a Mr. Law of South Carolina on Feb. 16, 1787, and was transmitted by Hopkins to Moses Brown of Providence on Mar. 9 (Samuel Hopkins, Works, I. 121). The act laid a tax of £5 on negroes between 7 and 12, and 30 and 40; £10 on those between 12 and 30. For every smuggled negro there was a fine of £100. James Iredell, Laws of North Carolina, pp. 577-579.

That the said Petitioners had at a Considerable expence and risque fitted out a ship to Coast off Africa for a Cargo of Slaves; That at the time the said Ship sailed the duty on imported Slaves was no more than two and a half per cent.; that after the sailing of the said ship and before her return the Law was passed increasing the duty on Slaves imported from Africa and that the Petitioners, ready to make every compensation in their power, are willing to pay double the duty which was laid on Slaves at the time they commenced the said voyage. Your Committee are therefore unanimously of the opinion that the said Petitioners on paying double the duty receivable on slaves on the first day of October, 1786, that is to say on their paying five per cent. on the original cost of the said Slaves, they be exonerated from the payment of any other or further duty on the said cargo of slaves imported from Africa some time in May or June, 1787, and that the collector of the Imports for Port Roanoke Govern himself with respect to the said Cargo of Slaves accordingly.

All which is submitted.

The House taking this report into consideration concurred therewith.[16]

Taylor suggests that the desire for prohibition came from the western part of the state and that the commercial interests were opposed to it. If this be true the commercial interests were in the ascendancy in 1790, for the restrictive duty of 1786 was that year repealed and for four years negroes could be brought into the state without hindrance.[17] In 1794 the legal importation of negroes into North Carolina came to an end.[18]

With South Carolina the problem is not how to construct a picture of the trade in negroes from meagre and inadequate materials but rather to select from abundant details what will be most informing. Here the student of the commerce in slaves has an opportunity to observe the conduct of the trade through the eyes of an acute, inter-

Maclaine wrote to Edward Jones: "I have also heard that you have a Bill before you for prohibiting the Importation of slaves, and that you support it with a religious enthusiasm. Considering our situation on the sea coast, and particularly in the neighborhood of Cape Fear, I should have thought it prudent to leave that Matter to Congress, who certainly will do the business Effectually at the expiration of Eighteen Years. I believe you have had no instruction on the Subject, and probably the Majority of your Constituents who either having no property, or not considering the dependence of the Town upon the country, might probably have been willing to abolish the Importation; but though I make no doubt even had your Sentiments been fully known, you would have carried your election; yet you certainly would not have had quite so great a majority as you had." *N. [18] N. C. Statutes, 1794, ch. 2. The next year North Carolina tightened her restrictions by forbidding settlers from the West Indies, the Bahamas, or any of the French, Dutch, or Spanish plantations to bring negroes into the state under penalty of £100 for every negro over fifteen brought in. The animating motive was doubtless fear of the West Indian negroes, which prevailed in this country for many years after the Santo Domingo revolution. In 1806 a member of the House of Representatives described one hundred negroes from the West Indies as more dangerous than 10,000 from Africa. Annals, 9 Cong., 1 sess., p. 360.

ested, and informed observer, Henry Laurens, who for a time took a leading part in the importation of negroes into Charleston, and who, after he withdrew from it, still commented with discernment upon its effects in the colony. For several years it is possible from his letters to construct a day-by-day picture of the arrival and sale of negroes in Charleston, a rare opportunity in the annals of this commerce. In addition to the material provided by this correspondence, the pages of the South Carolina Gazette yield much supplementary matter.[19] However, these two sources are pertinent only after the first third of the eighteenth century, and for the years in which the trade developed we have only the most fragmentary information.

The history of the slave trade into this colony offers numerous contrasts with that into Virginia. That slave labor would be the labor system of Carolina was a foregone conclusion from its earliest settlement. The English were already deep in the trade and many of the early settlers, coming from the West Indies, were familiar with the potential profits from negro labor. Four of the proprietors were members of the Royal African Company.[20] Under these circumstances it is hardly surprising that immediate provision for negro labor was made and that there was here no period of dependence upon indentured service. Differences in climate and in crops also contributed to make the Carolina market for negroes an eager though a fitful one, while Virginia's demand was more sluggish and without the speculative features most characteristic of Carolina's. Here again the date of settlement accounted for some of the dissimilarity. The planter's temptation to gamble on his tobacco crop was probably greatest in the seventeenth century, when few negroes were available. By the eighteenth, long continued hard times had destroyed his faith in the unlimited possibilities of future crops, and he was far less ready to run heavily into debt than was his more hopeful Carolina neighbor. This kept Virginia's eighteenth-century demand for negroes a moderate one and helped to stabilize the price.

Provision for grants of land in return for the bringing of negroes was made in the Fundamental Constitution of Carolina:

> For the owner of every negro man or slave brought thither within the first year, 20 acres, and for every woman negro or slave 10 acres; and all men negroes

[19] The Letter-Books of Henry Laurens, drawn on for large sections of this volume, are the property of the South Carolina Historical Society and are available because of the generosity of that society; a file of the South Carolina Gazette, well-nigh complete, is in the possession of the Charleston Library Society.

or slaves after that time and within the first five years 10 acres; and for every woman negro or slave 5 acres.[21]

Every Free-man and Free woman that transport themselves and Servants by the twenty fifth of March next, being 1667 shall have . . . . for every Woman-Servant and Slave 50 Acres, paying at most ½ d per acre, per annum, in lieu of all demands, to the Lords Proprietors. [22]

No room for misunderstanding is allowed by a note of May, 1670, from three of the Proprietors to Sir John Yeamans:

. . . . We find you are mistaken in our Concessions that wee have not made provision of Land for negroes for by saying that we grant 150 acres of land for every able man servant in that we mean negroes as well as Christians And the same in other proportions. . . .[23]

The first evidence of the presence of negroes in the province is in a letter from Henry Brayne to Lord Ashley, Nov. 9, 1670: "I have put on . . . provitions enough for my people which is one lusty negro man 3 cristian servants and a oversear I brought out of Virginia." Sir John Yeamans probably brought in a few not long after this.[24] A proclamation issued in Barbados on Nov. 4, 1670, provided a Carolina "friggott" for those going to Carolina and transporting servants and negroes,[25] and at least one purchase was made in the island for the new plantation:

Deare Bro'r, The shipps staying 'till now I have the oppo[r]tunity to give you an accompt. that I have prevayled wth Mr. Howell and Guy to give mee 6 mos after sight for payment of the Bills of £282 for Negroes for the Windward plant.[26]

In 1674 the Proprietors laid out a plantation south of the Ashley River, the control of which was granted to Andrew Percival, who was instructed to "begin a Trade with the Spaniards for Negroes".[27] In 1686 a report that thirteen slaves had been stolen by the Spaniards from Joseph Martin, governor of the province, is some indication that already there were planters with a considerable number of slaves.[28]

From this time on there is every reason to believe that the increase in the negro population was rapid, though there is little indication of its source. The Royal African Company did not turn its attention to this plantation, its efforts throughout the seventeenth century being concentrated on meeting the needs of the sugar planters. Probably the negroes were largely carried from the West Indies rather than directly from Africa, and a few at a time rather than in negro cargoes, though this is conjecture, not a statement of demonstrated fact. The chances are that the separate traders did not find their way to Carolina in great numbers until the trade was laid open by the act of 1698. By the end of the century direct commerce between Africa and Carolina was under way. In September, 1699, John and Nicholas Trott, of London, granted to "Gov. Blake and others in Carolina" power of attorney to collect from Captain William Rhett "all such sums of money, goods wares merchandise negro slaves, gold, elephants teeth wax effects and things whatsoever which the said Captain William Rhett had in his hands on account of their being part owners of the ship Providence burthen 150 tons whereof the said William Rhett is commander".[29]

A further and more important evidence of increasing numbers is to be found in the legislation concerning the relation between whites and blacks in 1686 and from that time throughout the decade of the nineties. After 1700 the documents which follow relate so completely the history of South Carolina's commerce in slaves that no further introductory comment is needed.[30]

One unusual feature of American history demands illustration in connection with the trade of Georgia. For fifteen years the Trustees of this colony forbade the importation or the holding of slaves though many of the planters clamored for them. Much of the Georgia material here included relates to the controversy between Trustees and planters or between groups among the planters. Many of the Scottish settlers of Darien and the Salzburgers of Ebenezer steadfastly opposed the importation of negroes; the ne'er-do-well English of Savannah as determinedly demanded it.[31] Under the persistent pressure which was brought to bear upon the harassed Trustees and in the face of the growing illicit importation which they seemed powerless to prevent they at last gave way. After 1750, when slavery was accepted, the characteristics of the trade resembled those of South Carolina, though on a reduced scale. A number of merchants traded in both colonies. When the Charleston port was closed to slaves they carried on their business in Savannah.

Once the permission to import negroes had been given, the increase in the negro population was rapid. On July 19, 1750, William Stephens, president of the colony, said that there were 349 working negroes in the colony. In August, 1751, the Trustees estimated that there were 400; in 1753, 1065 were listed and it was stated that the list was not complete; in 1760, 3578; in 1766, 7800.[32] Importation was greatest between 1760 and 1770. This might almost be inferred from a study of the advertisements for runaways, which are frequent during the sixties. The description of the errant negro frequently reads, "speaks no English", sure indication that the missing black was a "new negro". In addition, the slaves are often described by country, Angola, Congo, Ebo, Cormantine, Foulah, another evidence that they had not been long in the colonies. The seasoned negroes were rarely distinguished thus.

Until the Revolution, indeed until 1793, the trade was unrestricted. The act of that year, of which DuBois has apparently seen only the title, has been assumed to be an act forbidding importation: "An act to prevent the importation of negroes into this state from the places herein mentioned", but it only forbade importations from the West Indies, the Bahamas, and East and West Florida; indeed the records of the next few years make it obvious that Africa was not among the places mentioned or that the law was in effect for a brief period only. Customs manifests list negroes among the imports in 1794, 1795, 1796, and 1797. In 1798 importation was finally forbidden, first by legislation, later by a constitutional provision. After October 1, 1798, any importation whether from Africa or other place outside the United States was illegal.[33]

No attempt whatever has been made in this volume to document the Florida slave trade. During the days of the Assiento occasional cargoes were landed at St. Augustine though it was never an important market.[34] At a later date Florida was a convenient refuge for runaway negroes from Georgia and South Carolina. The demands of the English governors that these be returned were usually disregarded and in 1739 the Spanish governor at St. Augustine referred to orders from Madrid that all English negroes be given their freedom. In 1767 the trade was opened to the English, who took immediate advantage of the privilege.

> LONDON, Sept. 14 1767 Capt. Savery just arrived from St. Augustine, in the brigantine Augustine packet, carried there 70 Negroes from Africa, the first ever imported directly from thence, into that province. He informs that Dr. Stork, and a great many other settlers, were arrived there from England, in the Aurora, Capt. Fuller, and that upwards of 2000 Negroes were contracted for, by the noblemen and gentlemen in Great Britain, concerned in that province, to be imported there from Africa the ensuing summer.[35]

A year later the governor of Florida wrote, "Mr. Oswald has already upon his Estate there, above a hundred Negroes".[36]

Early in the history of the settlement of Louisiana the value of negro labor was recognized and a few blacks were brought in from the West Indies. One Santo Domingo merchant attempted to meet the need by an offer to exchange one negro slave for two Indians but he cannot have inaugurated a thriving business, since there were but ten blacks in the colony when Antoine Crozat, in 1712, was given a patent for the territory, with a monopoly of its trade. This grant allowed him to carry from Guinea to the colony one cargo of negroes a year.[37] Five years later his privileges and contracts were transferred to the Company of the West, the so-called Mississippi Company, one of John Law's creations. Law's schemes were at this time rapidly taking form. By December, 1718, he had acquired the privileges of the Company of the Senegal, to which he added the next year those of the East India Company, the China Company, and the Company of Africa trading to Barbary. These, with the Company of the West, were combined in one great merger, called the Company of the Indies, to which in the following year Law added the Company of Santo Domingo and the Guinea Company.[38]

The single company which now controlled the sources of labor supply and the French markets at once undertook to satisfy the needy colonists of Louisiana. In 1718 instructions were issued to the captains of the Aurore and the St. Louis to purchase slaves in Guinea and carry them to Louisiana. In 1719 about 500 negroes were apparently delivered, in 1721 the company landed 1312, and between that time and 1732, when the territory was surrendered to the control of the crown, the company delivered some 6000 negroes.[39]

For the delivery and allotment of these laborers most minute regulations were formulated. An agent examined the assets of the planters to make certain that the need was real and the prospect of payment good. Upon landing, the negroes were subjected to a careful physical inspection. They were then turned over to those planters to whom they had been assigned, by means of duplicate numbers given to purchasers and attached to the blacks.[40]

When the control of the colony was assumed by the crown the supervision of negro importation fell to the Ministry of the Marine, though the Company of the Indies was still the agency by which the negroes were procured. It offered to deliver negroes to Louisiana, in order to discharge the debt which it owed the crown, but this bargain, or any other, the ministry seemed unable or unwilling to conclude.[41] Many plans were suggested for the transportation of slaves and during the next few years there was much discussion of method but little actual importation. The archives of the ministry contain many proffers of cargoes but little indication that they were accepted. In 1733 Santo Domingo merchants drew up a scheme for carrying negroes from Africa to Louisiana; in 1737 a merchant of La Rochelle offered to carry blacks to this colony and to sell them below the prices prevailing in the West Indies, provided the colony would take his entire cargo.[42] Still the government took no action. In 1738 Bienville asserted that it had been eight years since negroes had been imported, that the price had risen to 1400 livres, and that the need was acute.[43] In 1741 Dalcour brought forward a project which, after long consideration, was accepted, and a cargo of 190 negroes was landed in Louisiana.[44] Despite the ready sale which the negroes met, the government did not allow itself to be committed to Governor Vaudreuil's suggestion that 300 negroes a year be provided for the next three years. Another period followed in which there was much negotiation and many plans which led to nothing, though there was probably some importation.[45] In 1752 and the years which immediately followed a few negroes were brought in each year but after the outbreak of the war France could give little attention to the economic development of Louisiana. The arrival and sale of the prize negroes from the Opal and the Fortune marked the end of French effort to provide this colony with a labor supply.

The years between 1762 and 1769, the period between the end of French control and the organization of the Spanish government, were years too confused and uncertain to make stable commerce possible.[46] Negroes were doubtless carried to Louisiana from the West Indies, since in 1763 it seemed necessary to forbid to the inhabitants of Louisiana the purchase of negroes from Santo Domingo. Two years later a similar order was issued with reference to Martinique.[47] Spain, however, with the closure of this source made no effort to supply the needed labor. That the English were smuggling negroes into the colony from Jamaica is evident. The intendant, Martin de Navarro, writing of 1766, said: "If the province of Louisiana had continued to enjoy the benefit which it obtained by means of the illegal trade of the English, it would now have had twenty thousand negroes or more; and consequently, a greater production and greater wealth." [48] Other problems of organization engrossed the Spaniards and they seem never to have made any systematic effort to provide slaves for the colony. "Even yet [1785] not the slightest measure has been taken relative to the sending of slaves, which is quite opposed to the method of making the province flourish and prosper." [49]

From letters written in the West Indies it is clear that by 1787 American traders were finding their way to New Orleans with negroes, probably in small lots.[50] In 1792 Carondelet forbade the importation of slaves from Jamaica or the French islands and suggested that the Louisiana traders obtain their supplies directly from Africa. The reason given for this order was the fear that the West Indian negroes might bring seditious ideas with them into the colony, [45] Among the many plans offered for transporting negroes to the colony an elaborate one proposed by M. Rouille, in 1747, suggested a combination of the importation of negroes and the production of tobacco on a large scale. Bibliothèque National, MSS. Français 12224, pp. 309-315.

a fear created, or at least accentuated, by the rebellion in Santo Domingo.[51]

There is no evidence that the effort to encourage direct trade with Africa met with immediate success, but in 1800 plans were afoot for African importation. The French company, Cassagne, Huguet, Raymond, and Company, was negotiating for the privilege of importing 5000 negroes into Louisiana free of duty.[52] The change of owners, which returned the colony to France, made no change in the policy of excluding West Indian slaves, obviously the most natural source of a Louisiana supply. On November 26, 1802, secret instructions were prepared for the officer intended to be sent out as captain-general of Louisiana, providing that "trade in slaves shall be made only with Africa, and no slaves shall be received in Louisiana that come from the American colonies, as this is the only means of preserving Louisiana from the moral contagion that has infected those colonies".[53]

The decree of the Spanish government against importation from the islands, now upheld by French orders, roused much opposition. Paul Alliot, in his Historical and Political Reflections on Louisiana, wrote:

> A decree of the Spanish government, forbidding the inhabitants of Louisiana to bring in slaves since the beginning of the troubles in San Domingo, has entirely paralysed the progress of agriculture. . . . Several merchants of Havana who have sent negroes over secretly, have sold them for three thousand francs tournois apiece. Although but newly arrived from the shores of Africa, yet they were sold at Havana only for from fifteen to eighteen hundred francs.[54]

The prohibition of importation by the United States after the purchase of Louisiana met with like objection.

> The absolute prohibition of introducing slaves, to be rigorously enforced beginning with October, has alarmed them to such a degree that they voice their disapproval and discontent loudly without the least secrecy. Truly it is impossible for Lower Louisiana to get along without slaves; and it will be very damaging to their interests if they can not obtain the hands necessary for their work, which will infallibly decline. It is not easy to adduce a reason for this conduct, unless it be purposely to weaken the colony, which was making great strides toward prosperity and wealth. The inhabitants are so angered that it is with difficulty that they will be able to be amalgamated with the rude citizens of the United States, wrote the Marqués de Casa Calvo, May 18, 1804.[55] On the same subject Laussat wrote: "The importation of negroes there is abolished point blank. The present inhabitants of Lower Louisiana could not have been attacked in a more vulnerable spot." [56] Officials from the United States added further evidence as to the state of mind of the inhabitants in the newly acquired territory:

> No subject seems to be so interesting to the minds of the inhabitants of all that part of the Country which I have visited as that of the importation of brute negroes from Africa. This permission would go further with them, and better reconcile them to the government of the United States than any other privilege that could be extended to this country. They appear only to claim it for a few years, and without it they pretend that they must abandon the culture both of sugar and cotton. White laborers they say cannot be had in this unhealthy climate. [57]

The form of the prohibitory measure allowed the importation of negroes into the territory from South Carolina between 1804 and 1807, and the surplus received from that state constituted a not inconsiderable number though it was not enough to satisfy the demands of the inhabitants. Governor Claiborne, with little support from the inhabitants, was unable to enforce the policy of exclusion and the smuggling of slaves came to be a well-organized business which, developed during the early years of the nineteenth century, continued for many years after the federal prohibition of all importation into the United States, and proved itself one of the most troublesome problems in the administration of the prohibitory legislation.

[Governor Nathaniel Johnson to the Board of Trade, 1703.][1]

To the Rt. Honble. the Lords Commissrs. for Trade and Plantations.

May it please your Lordships, In all Matters relating to the Acts of Trade and Navigation, I think my self obliged to trouble your Lordships with an Account from this place.

[2] Jonathan Amory had come to Charleston from the West Indies some time previous to 1691. As speaker of the assembly he signed the statement of grievances against the Proprietors in 1692. In 1697 he was advocate general and public treasurer in South Carolina. He died in 1699, a victim of the smallpox epidemic of that year. Gertrude E. [137] [1] L. C. Trans., C. O. 5: 1291, pp. 49-60.

And therefore presume to give your Lordships the following Account, and pray your Lordships Directions and Orders for the future, having in this Case done all that I was advised I could doe by Law, excepting I had had particular Powers and Instructions in it. The Case was this.

One Daniel Johnson junr. Son of One Daniel Johnson Senr. of Bermuda, was by the Royall Affrican Company of England, appointed Commander of the ship Christopher. And was Ordered by the Companys Agent from Gambia to Bermuda with Negroes. But the said Vessell being unable to proceed her voyage he made for Turks Islands [2] a place uninhabited, and there meeting with a Bermuda Vessell, he put part of his Negroes on Board her and consigned them to his Father and one Capt. Tucker, in Bermuda; And the other part he put on Board of a Carolina Vessell then with him at Turks Islands and came with them hither, and immediately sold them. And the ship Christopher he left with two or three hands in her at Turks Island, and Orded. them to look after her till such time as they should have Orders from his Fathr. and Capt. Tucker what to doe with her, he being obliged by the Companies agt. to follow the Directions of his Father and Capt. Tucker relating to the ship Christopher and other Affaires.

If this Johnson had done any fraud or injury to the African Company, I was not able to prove it. Neither had I or any person here any power from the African Company to call him or any other p[er]son to an Acct.

So that all I was advised I could do, was to oblige the said Capt. Johnson to give me an Account of his Lading, and took the Affidavits of himself and his Men relating to his Voyage, the Copyes of which I have inclosed to yo. Lordships, and to which I humbly refer your Lordships for a full Account of his said Voyage.

Of this Matter I thought my Selfe obliged to give your Lordships an Account, And to pray your Directn. therein; For though in this particular Case, I could not see any design there coud be of defrauding her Majesty, the Negros paying no Custome,[3] yet the manner of it if suffer'd to be put in practice, may be of dangerous Consequence, For by that Means persons may goe to such a Maroone place as Turks Islands, and put their Goods and Merchandizes (which it may be are brought thither in an unqualifyed Vessell) on Board of a quali-

[2] Islands of the Bahamas. At the close of the seventeenth century the inhabitants of Bermuda obtained their salt from Turks Islands and voyages there were frequent. Sir Charles Lucas, Historical Geography of the British Colonies: West Indies, p. 16.

[3] The negroes probably arrived in Charleston before the act of May, 1703, had gone into effect and therefore paid no custom. What Governor Johnson apparently means is, that had that act been in operation they would have escaped payment because, since they were not delivered in Carolina in the vessel on which they were shipped from Africa, they did not come under the terms of that measure.

fyd. Vessell and so import them into the Plantations, by which they may in many things utterly defeat the intent of Severall of the Acts of Trade, But I having no Man of War here to send down to Turks Islands, and to bring up the said Vessell, all that I could do was to take the best Account I could get of the Affair, and transmitt it to your Lordships, that if your Lordships think fitting you may give your Orders relating to Johnson who is gone from hence to Bermuda; And I pray your Lordships Directions what can be in any thing of the like nature for the future.

Johnson Mastr. thereof, to a place calld. St. Thomas's where the said Daniell Johnson putt ashoar two barrills of Nailes, two Cask of Pewter, forty hundred weight of Teeth and four Slaves into the hands of One Mr. Smith a Mercht. there, of whom he said he received one bitt per pound[6] for the pewter and [4] "Copy of a Letter and Information which I sent your Lordships by the Briganteen Joseph, James Norman Commander, which I am informed is lost." On Oct. 10, 1703, Lieutenant Governor Bennet of the Bermudas added a second chapter to the account sent to the Lords of Trade by Governor Johnson: "On the 16th instant I received from the Royal African Companies Agent at Antegua, H. M. Order of July 26 last, relating to the securing of the goods and effects belonging to that Company, that should be brought here by one Humphry Chisull and Captain Daniel Johnson from Gamboa, which upon suspecting the Captain's mismanagement I had done before, but Chisull is still (as I suppose) att Gamboa. What I have secured I doubt will fall much short of the Companies expectation, for this Johnson had been at St. Thomas's and sold all his elephants' teeth and wax, and also at Carolina, and there disposed of several negroes, and bought a sloop in which he came hither, and was very pressing to return to Gamboa, but I refused him unless he would make up his accounts, and give good security for his faithfull proceeding on the Companies behalf, which was not complyed with before my receipt of H. M. Order, and all that I can propose to do with him is, when I see his accounts to get what I can for the Company, and then secure him till I receive their further orders, of all which I have sent a particular to the African House by same conveyance with this." Cal. St. P. Col., 1702-1703, p. 751; endorsed: "Recd. Dec. 14, 1703, Read June 1, 1704".

Though Governor Johnson was mistaken in thinking the Joseph lost, his letter sent by it apparently did not reach the Board of Trade, who received his second account Sept. 13, and read it Oct. 19, 1704 (B. T. Jour., 1704-1709, p. 49). The next day William Popple, secretary to the board, acting on its instructions, wrote to the Commissioners of the Treasury for their opinion on the whole affair, in order to discover whether Johnson had violated any of the navigation laws (L. C. Trans., C. O. 5: 1291, p. 53). On the same day Popple sent to the governor or deputy governor of the Royal African Company a request for all the information the company had relating to Johnson's voyage. Ibid., p. 54.

And this Deponent further saith, when they arrived at Bermudas the Ninth of May one thousand seaven hundred and three, where the Master of the Sloop aforesaid delivered into the Custody of Captain Daniell Johnson Senr., as much dry Goods with thirteen Slaves as he paid sixty pounds for freight from Turks Island to Bermudas, and fourteen Guns and Cables new and old, one of wch the Deponent heard he sold for fifty Pounds, and fourteen Anchors, fourteen Cask of brass, pewter and beads, Rigging and Blocks.

And this Deponent further saith, that in the Month of June following, Daniell Johnson Master of the said ship Christopher came to Bermudas in the Sloop aforesaid, and after the Governr. was informed of said Daniell Johnson's proceedings, he Ordered him the said Daniell Johnson and his Father and this Deponent on the 24th of June aforesaid, to saile in the Sloop aforesaid to St. Thomas's to fetch the Teeth that he left with Mr. Smith aforementioned, which when they demanded Mr. Smith Said he had sold them, and then paid the said Daniell Johnson for them, from whence they sailed to Turks Island, where they found the ship Christophr. aforesaid, which ship Christopher the said Daniell Johnson late Commander, his Father and others unknown of this Deponent in the Month of July one thousand seaven hundred and three, sett fire to and burnt said ship Christopher, taking the Cables, Anchors, Rigging and Iron work belonging to the aforesaid ship back wth them to Bermudas.

The Answer of the Royll. African Company of England, to a Letter received from the Secretary attending the Lords Commissrs. for Trade and Plantations, Enclosing a Copy of a Letter their Lops. received from Sr. Nathaniel Johnson Deputy Govr. of Carolina, Dated at Carolina the 13th July 1703.[8]

They say that in November, 1702, the French with two ships surprized and took their Fort called James Fort in the River of Gambia and pillaged the same.[9]

That Capt. Daniel Johnson whom the said Company intrusted with their Ship called the St. Christopher was at the same time with a considerable Cargoe trading up the River Gambia and at his return finding the Companies Fort had been plundered by the French, he Combining with one Humphry Chisnull, another of the Company's servants, run away with said ship and Cargoe with such Slaves, Teeth, and Wax, which he has traded for as aforesaid, to his Father at Bermudas, whereas they are informed he sold most of the slaves, teeth and Wax, and converted their product to his own use and afterwards burnt their ship St. Christopher at Turks-Island.

The said Company so soon as they heard Johnson was runn away with their ship, sent Letters to all the Islands in the West Indies, where they hoped to meet him, upon notice of which, the Governor of Bermudas Seized the said Johnson, and by her Majesties Order sent him home a Prisoner, but he made his escape in the night out of the ship that brought him to a Port in England.

Since which the Company at their great expence have seized the Said Johnson, and intended to prosecute him for his Crimes, he is now a Prisoner in the Marshalsea.

They say they never Trade to Carolina nor ever intended their shipp St. Christopher should be carryed thither with Slaves or any other Comoditys whatsoever.

And further to satisfy their Lordships in the Truth of the perticulars above recited, they herewith also send a Copy of an Affidavit made by one that was present with said Johnson at Bermuda and other places in the West Indies.

On Apr. 12, 1706, the son requested an order to the governor of Bermuda to deliver goods belonging to himself and his father on account of the Royal African Company, "detained on pretence of his running away with the Christopher, lately belonging to that Company, and a like order to Edward Chester, or other Agent of the Company at Antego". The number of vessels is here omitted, since it is obvious that it bears no relation to the importation of negroes. How far these figures represent importation by small lots from the West Indies and how far direct trade from Africa can be surmised only after a painstaking accumulation of trifling items of evidence. Certainly both before and during this period there was some African trade. As early as 1700 Richard Oakley in a letter to the Royal African Company referred to vessels in the Gambia River from Carolina (Charles Davenant, Works, V. 175). In Edward Randolph's charges against Gov. John Archdale is the statement that he had seized a Carolina sloop "laden with negroes from Guinea" (Cal. St. P. Col., 1701, p. 90). An entry of 1709 from the London custom-house refers to the Loyall Johnson, a ten-per-cent. vessel, "To Carolina, Designed 200, Carried 180", which suggests a negro cargo (C. O. 388: 13, p. 104 i). Sometime before Aug. 30, 1711, Col. William Rhett of Charleston seems to have sent out a Guinea voyage. Thomas Amory, who had been selected by the Rhetts as a future son-in-law (a position which he never held), wrote from the Azores to congratulate Colonel Rhett on the great success of his Guinea voyage and the good market to which he had come. Later in the same letter Amory pointed to the ease with which he could send slaves to Brazil, then added, "but Negroes sell as well at Carolina as at Brazell for there they never give above 150 c p. head at most for lusty Negroes and Boyes 40, 50 and 60 C according as they are" (Meredith, Descendants of Hugh Amory, p. 53). For 1718-1719 we have evidence of two African cargoes of 80 and 90 negroes respectively: the Eagle (post, no. 143) with 80; a London brigantine captured by the pirate Charles Vane, with 90 negroes bound for South Carolina (Johnson, Pyrates, 1724, I. 97, 142-144; Boston News Letter, Oct. 20, 1718); while Teach, on the coast in 1717 or 1718, captured a brigantine with 14 slaves (Pyrates, I. 73; for the charge against one of Teach's men see Tyler's Quar. Magazine, I. 38). Most of our fragmentary evidence goes to show that this list is far from complete; for example, an estimate that the sterling value of the slaves imported in 1723 equalled £20,000 (B. R. Carroll, Historical Collections of South Carolina, II. 261). Some dealings with the Royal African Company the Carolinians must have had near the beginning of this period, for in 1708 Thomas Broughton of Charleston sent to the company his account asking that the balance due him be paid to his brother, Andrew Broughton, of London. This information was sent in reply to letters of May 7, 1707, and Apr. 15, 1708, from the Board of Trade (ibid., 1706-1708, pp. 427-428, 430, 477-480). The editor has not come upon Carolina's reply to the circular letter sent out by the board on Apr. 15, 1708, when it was in the process of preparing its extensive report for the House of Commons. In this report the board stated that 1000 negroes a year were required by Carolina and New York together. See this work, II. 63.

140. Act for governing Negroes, 1714.[1]

An additional Act to an Act entitled "An Act for the better Ordering and Governing Negroes and all other Slaves".[2] . . .

IX. And whereas, the number of negroes do extremely increase in this Province,[3] and through the afflicting providence of God, the white persons do not proportionably multiply, by reason whereof, the safety of the said Province is greatly endangered; for the prevention of which for the future,

Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all negro slaves from twelve years old and upwards, imported into this part of this Province from any part of Africa,[4] shall pay such additional duties as is hereafter named, that is to say:—that every merchant or other person whatsoever, who shall, six months after the ratification of this Act, import any negro slaves as aforesaid, shall, for every such slaves, pay unto the public receiver for the time being, (within thirty days after such importation,) the sum of two pounds current money of this Province.[5] . . .

[2] The introduction to the original act read: "Whereas, the plantations and estates of this Province cannot be well and sufficiently managed and brought into use, without the labor and service of negroes and other slaves; and forasmuch as the said negroes and other slaves brought unto the people of this Province for that purpose, are of barbarous, wild, savage natures, and such as renders them wholly unqualified to be governed by the laws, customs, and practices of this Province; but that it is absolutely necessary, that such other constitutions, laws and orders, should in this Province be made and enacted, for the good regulating and ordering of them, as may restrain the disorders, rapines and inhumanity, to which they are naturally prone and inclined; and may also tend to the safety and security of the people of this Province and their estates". Ibid., p. 352.

In 1711 an additional duty had been laid on negroes in order to raise funds for an expedition against the northern Indians and to aid North Carolina. The text of this act has not been found but there is a reference to it in the act of Mar. 20, 1719 (Cooper, III. 66). This may be the act to which reference is made by Cadwallader Colden in a letter of November, 1711, written from Charleston to a Philadelphia merchant: "They have laid a Duty of 6 £ a head upon all Negroes that have been above 5 Months in any of the Plantations by an act this last assembly" (Colden Papers, I. 4, N. Y. Hist. Soc., Collections, 1917). Governor Gibbes in an address to the assembly in 1711 "recommended particularly to their attention the introduction of white immigrants on account of the large increase of negroes, who were beginning to exhibit a malicious disposition" (W. J. Rivers, A Sketch of the History of South Carolina, 1856, p. 251). That South Carolina was not ready to place a serious check on the importation of negroes may be conjectured from the petitions of her merchants and planters in 1711 and 1712 against granting an exclusive trade to the Royal African Company, since it had never satisfied the needs of that colony. Journals of the House of Commons, XVI. 550, XVII. 157; Stock, Proceedings and Debates, III. 250, 287.

[3] The number of negroes estimated to be in the colony at this time was 10,000. Rivers, Hist. of S. C., p. 251n.

[4] The act of 1714 referred to by DuBois (p. 209), laying an additional duty on negroes from any part of America, known only by its citation in the act of Mar. 20, 1719, was possibly the act of Feb. 18, 1715, not 1714.

[5] The rate between currency, or the paper money of the province, and sterling, in 1714, was two to one (Wallace, Life of Henry Laurens, p. 53). A further evidence of disquietude was given by an act of June 30, 1716, to encourage the importation of white servants: "Whereas sad experience hath taught us that the small number of white inhabitants of this Province, is not sufficient to defend the same even against our Indian enemies, and whereas the numbers of slaves are daily increasing in this Province, which

And Arthur Lone the Defendant haveing put in his plea and Answer Sworne to the Same in Open Court which being admitted is as follows.

South Carolina. Before Nicholas Trott, Esqr. Judge of his ma'ties Court of Vice Admiralty in the province of South Carolina aforesaid Arthur Lone, Masr. or Comander of the Ship Ludlow Galley In behalfe of himselfe Mr. Samuel Barons and all other parties Interested and Concerned in the said Ship Ludlow Galley Appears and presents himselfe for and in Consideration of a Certain Libell asserted, produced and brought before you by Thos. Saunders, William Blackmore, John R——, Christian Crow, Samuel Wright, William Bovin, Henry Anderson, John Johnson, Benjamin Rowe, William Tisdell, Joseph Johnson, James Winter, William Corne, John Briggs, and Mathew Lord marriners belonging to the Said Shipp Ludlow Galley against him the Said Arthur Lone and for and by reason of all and Singular the matters and things therein Contained and the time Assigned to him the Said Arthur Lone to Answer the Same.

All advantages of E[illegible] to the Incertainties Insufficiencies and Imposettons of the Libellants Said Libell now and all things hereafter Sav'd and reserv'd unto the Said Arthur Lone this Defendt. for Answer thereunto Saith That true it is that the Said Libellants were Shipt on board the Ludlow Galley Arthur Lone masr. the thirteenth day of September One thousand Seven hundred and sixteen as appears by an obligation under their hands and Seals bearing the same date in and by which Instrument in Writeing they Oblige themselves to proceed to Guinea with the said Ship and after her being Slav'd to proceed to one or more of the American plantations as the Said Captn. or his Successor should determine and as shall be most ad-may likewise endanger the safety thereof, if speedy care be not taken to encourage the importation of white servants. . . . VIII. And be it further enacted That every owner of every plantation of which doth belong ten slaves, young or old, and all persons possessed of the like number of slaves, shall take from the Receiver one servant when it shall happen to be his lot to have one, and shall pay to the Receiver so much money for the said servant, as the Receiver gave to the person from whom he received the same, and the owner of every plantation to which doth belong twenty slaves, as aforesaid, shall, when it shall be his lot, take two servants, as aforesaid, and every master of every plantation proportionably for every ten slaves." This was repealed June 29, 1717 (Cooper, II. 646-649). A bounty of £25 was to be paid to those importing white servants. The duty act of the same date placed £3 on African negroes, £30 on all others, to be paid in currency.

vantageous for the owners That the said Capta. Lone had orders from the Owners of the Said Ship in England to appear and Come to an Anchor off of the Barr of Charles Town and give Mr. Richard Splatt [Platt?] a person Imployed as agent or factor to the owners of the said Shipp Notice of his Arrival and in Case the Said Splatt was of opinion that the Country was in a Tolerable flourishing condition so as to produce Comodityes enough to make returns to England for that So Considerable a Cargoo and that Negroes bore a good price Hee was then to come over the Barr And the Said Splatt finding that it would be very much to the Interest of the Gentlemen Concerned in the Said Ship and Cargo that she should Deliver her said Cargo at this port of Charles Town and not to hazard Any other voyage after so long and dangerous a voyage performed thought it advisable to give him orders to Come into this Harbour of Charles Town and here deliver his said Cargoo of Slaves a great many of which in all probability would have dyed if he had attempted to go to any other place and as to that part of the Complainants Libell where they alledge and propound that they were to be paid Thirty Shillings Sterling money of Great Brittain per month to proceed on the said Voyage. The Said Arthur Lone doth propound to your Honour that the Said marriners were not Shiped on board the Said Ship to receive Sterling money of Great Brittain for their Wages for that it is usual and Customary for the Merchts. of Great Brittain to give the Sailors of any Ship or Ships bound for Guinea and from thence to any part of the West Indies Five and Twenty Shillings per month and no more but the Said Lone and the Owners of the said Ship Ludlow Galley fearing that there would be a difference in the Coin of any part or port in America and of Great Brittain and being willing that the Said Marrin'rs and Sailors might reap the fruits of their Labour gave them Five Shillings per month more than the Comon wages given for such a voyage in Consideration of which the Officers and Marrin'rs entered Severally and a part into a Bond or Obligation to performe the Said Voyage and therein and thereby agreed as is recited in the Said obligation reference being thereunto had doth and may more fully and at large appear.

The Said Severall officers and Marrin'rs on board the said Ship shall not claim any right or title to any further wages or pay untill the Said Ships Arrivall and discharge in any of our plantations than to receive only one halfe of the wages that shall be due to us or the whole if the Captn. or his Successors so pleaseth in the Current Specie of the Country and no further claim or Demand untill the Arrivall of the said Ship to this port of London. By reason of which Bond or obligation the said Lone Conceives and is advised that he is not Oblige[d] to pay them in any other Specie or in any other proportion than accounting one pound Currt. money of this Colony Equall to one pound Sterling money—especially Considering that they had Five Shillings per month advanced to them above what is Customary in the like voyages and that the Owners positive Orders to him are to pay them in the Currency of the plantation where he should deliver his Cargo according to the true Intent and meaning of the Said Bond, and that if he did not in all respects oblige the Said Marriners to a performance of every Article of the said Bond he will be lyable to answer the neglect and reimburse his Owners as much as their Interests may Suffer by his not abiding by and Insisting upon the Agreement made in Great Brittain.

And as to and for and Concerning all that part of the said Libellants Said Libell whereby they sett forth that their wages are respectively due which Said wages computing from the Said thirteenth day of May do amount to the Sume of Twelve pounds Sterling money of Great Brittain to each of the said Libellants, and the Said Libellts. demanding their wages due to them for their Service on board the said Ship of the said Master or Mr. Richard Splatt they were given to understand that the said Libellants had Signed some Bond or Instrument in writing purporting amongst other things that they should receive their wages pound for pound Carolina money, which Bond or writing was never read or at least explained to the said Libellants as they alledge in their Said Libell and that in as much as the Said Libelants had not the least Intimation or notion of any Difference between the Said money of Carolina and Virginia and that the Said Libellants are advised that the Act made in the Sixth year of the reigne of her Ma'tie Queen Anne Intituled an Act for Accertaining the Rates of Foreign Coins in her Ma'ties plantations in America makes no distinction of the Currency of the Said Coin in America but settles it all at the same price.[2] The Said Lone doth propound as in this answer he hath before propounded that the Said Libellants wages are respectively due from the thirteenth day of September one thousand seven hundred Sixteen to which time the Deft. is willing to pay the same but never the less in the Current Specie of this province aforesaid and not to the thirteenth day of May One thousand Seven hundred and Seventeen as the Libellants in their Said Libell Alledge which at the rate of thirty Shillings per month Doth Amount to ten pounds ten Shillings to each of the said Libellants This Defendt. Conceiveing that the voyage was ended the day the Cargo of the Said Ship was delivered and that if there is any more wages due it is on a new Voyage and to be paid in Great Brittain That the said Libellants did Signe a Bond or Instrument in writing purporting as they in the said Libell have sett forth which is ready to be produced to your Honour and further Saith that the said Bond or Instrument of writing lay upon the Table in the great Cabbin when the Complainants Signed the said Bond and conceives that amongst So many of them that Wright good hands as appears by their signing the Said Bond they could by no means have Signed and Sealed the said Instrument had they not first read it heard it read or had it explained that Some of them was acquainted in some measure with the Lowness of the Currency of this Country appears by their being here in the said Ship the Voyage before this, and that the Owners of the said Ship could not give them better Information for that the money of this Country is grown of very considerable less Value within these few months and that the Act recited in the Libellants said Libell was made for Settling a Just estimate and value upon pieces of Eight Dollars and other pieces of Silver were Current but that the said act Cannot be taken to extend to any Colony w[h]ere the said Silver is not Current as in this province where the Currency is only paper and Silver made a Merchandise when it can be gott and Conceives and is advised that it does not oblige him to pay the Said Libellants Wages according to that Establishment since it cannot be taken notice of in this province where the currency is a [illegible] paper but that they ought to be paid according to an Obligation of their own Signing and Sealeing in the said Currency.

And Lastly as to for and Concerning what the said Libellants in their Said Libell do further alledge Sett forth or propound Concerning Mr. Samuel Barons his Imposing a notorious Fraud upon the said Libellants when he induced (as they alledge) to Signe Such a Bond or writing for taking their wages in the current money of this province Instead of Sterling or Virginia money and that therefore in all Courts of Equity it ought to be deemed to have been Scandalously obtained from the said Libellants and therefore in no wise obligatory or binding on the said Libellants as they humbly Conceive and are advised and the rather for that the Said Libellants were told by the Said Samuel Barons that it was only a Bond to perform the voyage and was read to few or none of the said Libellants nor Sealed and delivered by any of them as their Act and Deed. The Said Lone with all Submission Conceives that there was no design of fraud in the sd Barons his Owner for as much as he did not know to what little value the money of this Colony is reduced within this few months as is before sett forth,[3] that he is a considerable Trader and a man of Great Reputation upon Exchange of London and was never known to be guilty of any fraud in any Contract or dealing that he never induced the Libellants by any Insinuation or persuasion to Sign the Said Bond or Instrument, that he never Concealed the tenour or purport of it from them but exposed it to their view and Submitted it to their Constructions, that he never told them it was only to perform the voyage that they themselves was Judges of what Obligation they laid themselves under Since it appears by the Libellants own Showing in the Said Libell that it was read to few of them and when such a number of Men Sign an Obligation those that are made acquainted with it Inform the Rest and it is reasonable to suppose and pass almost for a Certainty that they would not have signed it had they not been acquainted with its Tenour and Effect and that the Defendt. Saw the Said Libellants one or more Signe Seale and as their Act and Deed Deliver the Said Bond as appears by the Severall Witnesses to the Said Bond.

And therefore this Defendt. doth plead the Bond or Obligation Signed Sealed and Delivered in the presence of their Credible Witnesses whereof the Deft. is one and is ready to make Oath of the same, and is advised and desires to abide by the Said Bond or Obligation and Humbly prays the Judgment of this Honble. Court whether he shall be put to make any further or other answer thereunto.

142. Minutes of Meetings of the Lords Proprietors, 1719.[1]

Present
- Lord Carteret Palatin
- Mr. Ashley
- Sr. John Colleton
- Mr. Danson

Feb. 13, 1718/9.

Mr. Baron and other Merchts. attending presented to the Lords, a Petition against An Act of Assembly, wherein an Additional Duty is laid of 40 £ per Head upon all Negroes that shall be imported after 8th June 1719,[2] which Petition being read,

The Lords think the repealing this Act (they not having any Knowledge that such an Act was ever pass'd, or what the Reasons [142] [1] C. O. 5: 292, pp. 113-115.

[2] The act against which the merchants complained was an additional act to an act for the better ordering and governing of negroes and other slaves, passed Dec. 11, 1717, for the avowed purpose of checking the alarming number of negro importations. It was to take effect eighteen months after its passage and to continue for four years (McCord, VII. 368-370). It was repealed by the assembly on Mar. 20, 1719, before it had gone into effect. Cooper, III. 66.

were for passing such Act) is a Matter of so great Consequence, that they desire further time to consider of it; And if it appears to be so very prejudicial to the Merchts. as is averr'd their Lord'ps will then repeal it.

Order'd that Mr. William Wragg [3] who is one of the Council at Carolina, and was there at the Time when this Act was pass'd in the Assembly do send word to the Secretary in Writing, what the Title and purport of the said Act is, and what were the Inducements and Reasons for the makeing the said Act. . . .

Feb. 20, 1718/9.

The merchants having been heard concerning the 40£ per head additional duty upon negroes, etc., the Lords did not think it advisable to repeal the said act, but will immediately send to the governor and council for the act, and require their reasons for passing it; directions will also be given that in future they pass no act affecting the trade or shipping of this Kingdom without a reserved clause, that the acts shall not be of force until they have received the approval and confirmation of the proprietors. . . .

Feb. 27, 1718/9.

Read the merchants address to the board respecting two acts, one entitled "An additional act to an act entituled an act for laying an imposition upon liquors, goods and merchandize"; the other "A further additional act to an act entituled an act for the better ordering and governing of negroes and all other slaves".[4] As to the first act, the Lords agree to its repeal; as to the second, order was given to prepare a letter to the governor and council, stating that great complaints have been made against the said act, and they have been pressed to repeal it, but the Lords are unwilling to repeal it from the report of the danger likely to accrue to the country from the number of negroes; if the governor however considers there is no real danger, they are advised to repeal the act and in lieu to pass one

[3] Is it conceivable that the Proprietors had confused William Wragg with Samuel his nephew, who was a member of the South Carolina council and a considerable merchant of Charleston and London? Samuel had in 1719 but recently come to London. It may be remembered that his first attempt to make the voyage to England was frustrated by his capture by pirates off the Carolina coast. S. C. Hughson, Carolina Pirates and Colonial Commerce, 1670-1740 (Johns Hopkins Studies, vol. XII.), p. 70; Johnson, Pyrates, I. 74.

[4] Both acts were passed Dec. 11, 1717. The first laid no new duty but somewhat modified the process of collection, and exempted from its operation goods or negroes imported in ships built and owned in the province. Goods imported in vessels built in the province but owned elsewhere paid half the duty. Cooper, III. 32-33; McCord, VII. 370.

143. Case of the Hanover Succession, 1719.[1]

Memorandm. That on the Sixteenth Day of November Anno. Dom. 1719, personally came and appeared before me William Blakewey, Esq. Judge of his Ma'ties Court of Vice Admiralty in the province of S. C. Nicholas Gardiner Marriner late master or Commander of the Bensworth Galley belonging to Bristol who being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelist Saith:

That he being a passinger on board the Eagle pinck Capt. William Ricketts Comander from the Coast of Guynea having on board about Eighty and odd Slaves on or about the Latter end of September last the sd Ship Eagle being at anchor off North Edistoe the Ship Hanover Succession (Capt. Clipperton Comander) came to anchor nigh the said pink and the sd Clipperton came on board the said Pink and there stayed about three or four hours. And in the meantime Clipperton's boat manned with Sailers belonging to the said Capt. Ricketts was by Clipperton's order sent on board the Hanover Succession to fetch a Barrell of Rice and a Cask of Water which the said Capt. Ricketts then stood very much in need of for the Support of Negroes and others then aboard him, which was accordingly brought on board the sd. Eagle Pink and presently after that Clipperton went on board the Hanover Succession again. And Nicholas Gardiner further saith that on the next day he went on board the ship Hanover Succession in order to get another cask of Rice and a Barrell of Water which Clipperton then ordered his Sailers to get

[5] The letter here ordered was sent the same day, with instructions that hereafter no act affecting trade was to be passed without the approval of the Proprietors (C. O. 5: 290, pp. 132-135), and with an explanation of their repeal of the first of the two acts: "We think it highly unreasonable and unjust, that in matters relating to trade, any difference or distinction should be made between his Majesty's subjects residing in Great Britain and those that live in our Province of South Carolina, or that any greater duty should be imposed on ships built in Great Britain than on ships built in Carolina; wherefore we the Lord Palatine and the rest of the Lords Proprietors of the Province of South Carolina in America, do think it proper to repeal and make void an Act of Assembly entituled an additional Act to an Act entituled an Act for laying an imposition on liquors, goods, and merchandizes, etc. and we do hereby declare the said Act, and all matters and things therein contained, to be repealed, made null and void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever" (Cooper, III. 33). Before the letter of Feb. 27, 1719, could have reached the province the various acts pertaining to negro duties had been repealed by the assembly and a new measure passed, on Mar. 20, 1719, which laid a duty of £10 on African negroes and £30 on all others imported, and continued the distinction between vessels built and owned in Carolina and those owned in Great Britain. This was repealed by the Proprietors on July 24: "We have repealed the three several Acts you sent Us over, vizt. An Act for the laying an Imposition on Negroes, Liquors, and other Goods and Merchandizes etc. We think that Act illegal because of the great inequality the Subjects of Great Britain lie under in relation to their Trade" (C. O. 5: 290, p. 151). Before the news of this action reached America the rule of the Proprietors was over and the act remained in effect. Cooper, III. 56-69; McCrady, Proprietary Government, p. 649.

out (he knowing that the Ships Crew and all the Negroes on board the Eagle Pink had for long time before undergone great hardships for want of the same or some other provisions), but the Sailers in general (and in particular the two Mates) murmured seeming thereby to refuse to obey their Captn. Commands complaining that the Rice could not be got at without taking out the Head of the Cask and further at the same time abused the Master Clipperton by the most Scurrilous and Ill Language that could be thought of. And the Deponent saith that the Rice might easily have been got at and that without any further trouble than unstowing Six Barrels of Tarr at the most but through the Obstinacy of the men the Master Clipperton was forced to comply with the Saylors and deliver the Cask of Rice to Supply the then Emergent necessitys of Ricketts and Gardiner the rest of the persons on board the said Eagle Pink by Staveing out the Head of the Cask Which this Deponent looks upon as the more inhuman in the marriners by reasons of the Great necessitys and the Deplorable Circumstances the persons on board the said Eagle Pink were in at that time. And Nicholas Gardiner further Saith that as soon as Clipperton the first time went on board the Eagle Pink he immediately complained of the hard usage of his Sailors and that he had been forced to Steer back for Charles Town tho contrary to his will. And Gardiner further saith that on parting with Clipperton which was in two days time after they first mett, Capt. Ricketts offered Clipperton to lend him some hands (if he wanted them) to help him heave up his Anchor which Clipperton replyed that if he wanted any he would send his Boat for them. And Gardiner further Saith that neither he nor Capt. Ricketts (in his hearing) ever offered to lend Clipperton any hands to help him into the Harbour at Charles Town.[2] . . .

144. Governor Robert Johnson to the Board of Trade, 1720.[1]

Charles Town, South Carolina, Jany. 12, 1719/20.

My Lords, . . . There have been exported in one year, by

[2] The point at issue in this case was the condition of the Hanover Succession. There is no further reference to the negro cargo of the Eagle.

[144] [1] Rivers, Chapter in the Early History of South Carolina, pp. 98-99. Endorsed: "Recd. April 29, 1720. Read 3 May, 1720." Robert Johnson was governor from 1717 till the overthrow of the proprietary government. This information was given in answer to a query sent out by the Board of Trade, "What Trade is there in that Province, by exportation or importation, how, and in what particulars is the Trade thereof increased or decreased of late years, and what hath been the reason of such Encrease or Decay". Two estimates of population were sent to the Board of Trade in 1720, one gave the population as 9000 whites and 12,000 blacks; the second, 1500 to 2000 fighting white men and 14,000 to 15,000 negroes (Br. Trans., VIII. 66, 254. Unless otherwise stated, the British Transcripts to which reference is made are those in the possession of the South Carolina Historical Commission at Columbia). In the account of taxpayers for this year, the number of slaves was given as 11,828 (ibid., IX. 23). Between the loss of power on the part of the Proprietors in 1719 and the arrival of Francis Nicholson, the first royal computation above fifty thousand barrells of both [pitch and tar], which great exports of Navell Stores, not only have occasioned the greater consumption of British Manufactures, but incouraged the Merchants abroad, to import into this Province, great numbers of Negroe Slaves from Africa, and brought a great concourse of Ships to this Port, to load our bulky Commodities. . . . Whence[2] we import . . . from the Northern Plantacons . . . Negro Slaves. . . . To this bounty money[3] was chiefly atributed the cause of our Trades increasing very considerably, within these ten years our Planters having by means thereof, been so enriched as to purchase great numbers of Negroes Slaves, the labour of which has incredibly increased the produce and manufacture of this Province.[4] . . .

governor, in 1721, James Moore acted for the new government, but Johnson maintained his claim to the position for some time after the revolution. This probably accounts for the date of this report.

[2] From the American plantations.

[3] The bounty for exporting naval stores.

[4] Enclosure in the above letter: "We receive Cloathing, Furniture, Iron Ware, and every other thing that is necessary for the conveniency of the life of man from Great Britain, whose Merchants are the only Traders with us, and by yearly supplying us, with near one thousand negroes encreases our export by the many more hands sett at work." ("Answer to the Queries sent by the Hon'ble the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations relating to the State of South Carolina", Rivers. Chapter in the Early History of South Carolina, pp. 98-99, 108). Estimates of profit from slave labor in Carolina were always large: "A planter can make more tar here with fifty slaves than they can do with double the number in those places" (Virginia and the northern colonies, Cal. St. P. Col., 1699, p. 106). A Letter from South Carolina, 1710, computes the returns from 30 negroes working on 90 acres of land: "The 30 Negroes beginning to work in September or October will clear 90 Acres of Land, plant and hoe it: half of which, that is 45 Acres, sowed with Rice, will, after the common computation yield 1000 Weight an Acre, which sold at 15 s. a Hundred, the middle Price, amounts to 337 l. 10 s. The other 45 Acres are to be sowed with Indian Corn, Pease, Pompins, Potatoes, Melons, and other Eatables for use of the Family." Governor Glen in his "Description of South Carolina" (1761) estimated that good land could raise from ten to thirty-five bushels of corn an acre, and that one negro could tend six acres. Corn then sold for from 10 s. to 15 s. per bu., currency. Of rice, one negro could produce from 22 to 23 cwt., which sold for from 45 s. to 55 s. per cwt. (Carroll, Collections, II. 202-203). All was not well with the planters however. The large purchases of negroes had plunged them into debt, the burden of which the act of Feb. 13, 1719, attempted to relieve: "Whereas, divers persons within this Settlement, not knowing how or on what fund or funds, the several sorts of bills of credit currant in the same were settled, nor forseeing the great and sudden fall of their commodities, as rice from four pounds the hundred unto forty shillings, have unwarily engaged themselves, some by entering into bonds for currant money, at and after the rate of two hundred and fifty pounds currant money for new negroes, and other, for upwards of that sum; whereas indeed new negroes are worth, at the highest price, not above thirty pounds, or thirty-five pounds proclamation money. . . . And whereas, some few persons have endeavoured to amass to themselves the greatest part of all the several sorts of said bills into their own keeping . . . do intend that such debtors shall in a little time pay such currant moneys (as they are so called by several acts of this Settlement) in proclamation money, to the utter ruin of such persons, who have made or entered into such bonds, contracts, or agreements, and tending to the depopulation of the whole Settlement, unless some remedy according to equity be provided against a calamity so general." The act provides that such debts may be paid in Carolina commodities at a fixed schedule of prices. Cooper, III. 105-108.

[145] [1] C. O. 5: 387, f. 130. These were the years in which the swamp lands of Carolina were being opened to rice. This not only created a demand for negro labor but provided a commodity with which it could be purchased. F. V. Emerson, "Geographic Influences in American Slavery", American Geographic Society, Bulletin, XLIII. 13 (1911).
